Velma Pierce, leading woman with one of the Sterling companies, is now in the California hospital, a convalescent from a very serious illness as the result of stepping on a needle which penetrated her foot.

Stages a Thrilling Chase

Donald Crisp is directing the filming of "A Mother's Trust," a one reel Majestic release, a heart interest drama written by Russell E. Smith, in which the last act of a dying crook is to convince his mother that he has reformed. Robert Harron and Cora Drew have important parts.

Last week Sheriff Arthur Mackley staged a chase by the Western sheriff's posse with new features for the one reel Reliance Western drama, "Where the Mountains Meet," written by Gardner Hunting. Among those in the cast are Florence Crawford, W. H. Long, and A. W. Lowery.

Mae Marsh, F. A. Truner and Robert Harron will take leading parts in a two reel Majestic picture "The Great God Fear," written by Daniel Carson Goodman. This is the portrayal of small town panic caused by the announcement that one citizen is afflicted with leprosy.

Hot heads urge lynching the unfortunate man and are about to carry out the plan when the truth concerning the sick man becomes known. The company is at Bear Lake, Cal., making exteriors.

Jaek Kerrigan's Illness in Film

Jack Kerrigan is hobbling about the big U studio on crutches, following a scratch on the foot and the development of blood poisoning. But Jack is not allowed to take a vacation because of the need of crutches.

Director Jacques Jaccard was horrified when he learned of the condition of his lead and furthermore saw a week's lay off for himself and company. Then he began writing a scenario for a picture in which Kerrigan could use his crutch, swollen foot, and general illness to advantage.

The company is producing "The Proof of a Man," and many of the players about the studio think Kerrigan is merely acting with his crutch. The picture is laid in Chinatown of San Francisco.

Frank Lloyd is this week directing a two reel picture "The Vagabond," by Ruth Anne Baldwin, in which Herbert Rawlinson plays the title role. The other members of the cast for this melodrama are William Worthington, Anne Little, and Helen Wright.

Another Scenario for Himself

Mrs. Rose Janowitz, who for the past year has served her brother, Manager Isadore Bernstein, of the West Coast Universal studios as assistant, left last week for Louisville, Ky., where she will remain until the holidays in company with the little daughter of Manager Bernstein, who will attend school in that city.

Robert Z. Leonard has written another scenario for himself which is being produced. The title of this single reel is "The Little Sister," and Ella Hall will play the title role.

Louis Joseph Vance is having a strenuous time keeping ahead of the "Trey-o'-Hearts" producing company under the direction of Wilfred Lucas. When he arrived here a few days ago they were waiting on working script, and it was necessary to wait two days.

Mr. Vance is now writing the ninth instalment of the serial and the company is producing the eighth, which will be released under the title of "The Counterfeit Rose." Like all the preceding instalments there is a big punch in every scene of the series number eight, the biggest feature being the burning of a specially constructed three-story building, at the new Universal City.

Two Fire Departments in Scenes

Two Hollywood fire departments were used in the fire scenes. George Larkin, as Alan Law, performed another thriller when he swung to the third story window of the burning building on a rope and rescued the heroine. Aside from a few scratches and small blisters none of the members were injured.

Director Lucas put in the most strenuous day of his motion picture career and in the evening told members of the company he felt as if he had just experienced the greatest Fourth of July celebration of his life.

Members of the U Joker Company under the direction of Allen Curtis is filming "When Their Wives Joined the Regiment," a travesty on the present European war written by Clarence G. Badger. Max Asher and Louise Fazenda are playing the leads.

The members of the Harry Edwards Joker Company are making "The Dear Hunter," from a story by Chief Jimmie Dayton of the U scenario department. It may be added that this is the open season for deer hunting in California.

Whole Picture Double Exposure

A decided novelty is being produced by the Charles Giblyn Company under the title of "For the Cause," a one reel melodrama. In this Murdock McQuarrie plays the two leading parts and practically all of the picture will be double exposure work.

The marvelous work of the Buzzards Bay, Mass., wireless operator in governing a fifty-foot launch by wireless, gave Dr. H. G. Stafford, of the Universal scenario department, food for thought, and he has produced a scenario, "The Silent Peril," which will show this latest use of wireless.

The picture is being made by the Henry McRea 101 Bison Company. Marie Walcamp, William Clifford and Sherman Bainbridge will be featured.

Director Colin Campbell and Selig players are home after spending a week on the California sand dunes near Oxnard taking scenes for "The Carpet of Bagdad," in which fourteen camels and other caravan accessories were used. The settings for Oriental streets are nearing completion and it is probable the big scenes in which many extra people will be used will be filmed soon at the Selig Jungle Zoo studio.

Complete Local Kalem Plant

Arrangements are now being made to install a laboratory at the Hollywood Kalem studio under the management of Marshall Neilan. Heretofore all film has been sent to the New York office for developing, cutting, and printing, which arrangement has been very unsatisfactory in many respects.

The Smalley Bosworth Producing Company has been filming "The Hypocrite," a five-reel subject. The Bosworth studio, at Occidental and Council streets is nearing completion and this week the first laboratory work was done there. The stage, dressing rooms, and light diffusers are not finished, and the companies are working at the Loftus studio in Hollywood for the present.

Max Figman and Lolita Robertson (Mrs. Figman), who have been playing at the Jesse Lasky studio, after completing "What's His Name," thought they were going to have a three week's vacation, but at the end of a week a telegram called them to San Francisco to play leads in "The Old Curiosity Shop" at the Belasco Alcazar Theatre, for a two week's engagement.

Col. Rhys Price, who served under the British flag throughout the Boer war, and proved himself a regular soldier of fortune when three or four years ago he organized an army composed of eleven cow punchers and about one hundred greasers, in Lower California, and took the town of Tiajuna, by storm, is now a motion picture actor and is assisting Director D. W. Griffith with the military and cavalry movements for war scenes in "The Clansman."

For this work he is proving a genius. Price was held in Los Angeles jail for many months following his filibustering, when Pres. Diaz offered $10,000 for his head, and quite a diplomatic tangle was brought on by his arrest. England claimed him as a military subject. Finally the Federal Government washed its hands of the entire affair and turned him free.

Will Select Players Independently

The Masterpiece Film Manufacturing Company, a close corporation, capitalized at $300,000, and composed of Los Angeles business men, began work last week at the Court street studio, Los Angeles, on the production of their first release, "The Hoosier Schoolmaster," from the book by Edward Eggleston.

The production is being filmed under the direction of Marion De La Parelle and E. J. Clawson, with Max Figman playing the part of Ralph Hartsook, and Lolita Robertson taking the character of Hannah Thompson. The release will consist of five reels.

It is the intention of this company to make nine releases during the year, all of which will be from famous plays or copyrighted novels, and within the next few weeks the entire program for the year will be announced. At the present time the company has options on twenty or more stories or plays.

The leading parts of each production will be taken by stage celebrities of the same magnitude as Max Figman and Lolita Robertson. Only clean high-class comedy dramas will be produced. The company will not maintain a stock company of players but will select the actors and actresses for each production independent of previous work or future subjects, choosing a type best suited for the part, in the same manner as players are selected for stage productions in England and other foreign countries.

George Lessey Staging New Play

Director Henry McRae, under whose guiding hand the greater number of the spectacular 101 Bison Western-Indian dramas have been produced, is bringing out a new work entitled "Daughter of the Plain."

"Love and Surgery" is the title of the first H. Pathe Lehrman comedy being made for release under the new Universal brand, the "L. K. O." It is a characteristic "Lehrman" product and in it are two notable actors of the vaudeville world, Billie Ritchie and Gertrude Selby.

After putting the finishing touches to "The Law of the Lumberjack" and "A Daughter of the Redskins," two sensational dramas, the 101 Bison (Universal) Company, under the direction of Henry McRae, has returned from a fortnight's stay in the forests of giant sequoias in the Sierras of the country in and around Hume, Cal. And with them they have brought many a tale of adventure and narrow escapes from danger.

George Lessey, of the Universal staff of directors is now putting on a picture starring King Baggot called "The Treasure Train" and had to compete with quite a new and trying situation to secure local color. The picture deals with a hold-up of a train load of children and quite a problem loomed up as to where they would get the children. But arrangements were made with various orphan asylums and when this scene is filmed at least 250 children will be the guests of the Universal Company.

Julius Stern of the Universal Company, although he has been in the motion picture business for six years, had never appeared on the screen until the present series featuring Christy Mathewson was inaugurated. Mr. Stern is shown supervising the signing of Matty's contract.

INTERESTING FILM REVIEWS

PRODUCTIONS FROM ALL PROGRAMS

GENERAL FILM PROGRAM

"The Mysterious Lodger." (Vitagraph. Thurs., Aug. 28.)—The engrossing story of a man's fight against his fate, which made him the husband of a drunken woman and pointed suspicion at him as her murderer when she accidentally killed herself. Maurice Costello and Constance Talmadge are cast in the leading parts.

"The Terrible Lesson." (Biograph. Thurs., Aug. 27.)—A drama of the housemaid that saves her crook husband from committing robbery by substituting false money for the real money in the safe. It would be engrossing in its entirety but for the fact that the main events, the grip of the railroad frog upon the foot of the man, does not convey the illusion of great danger, because it happens on a siding.

"Slippery Slim and the Fortune Teller." (Essanay. Thurs., Aug. 27.)—One of the best of the "Slippery Slim" comedies that have been issued. Slippery turns the tables on Pete by telling his fortune in the gypsy's tent, and instilling into him mortal fear of Sophie. Thereupon the field is cleared of rivals, and Slim has matters in his own hands.

"The Aggressor." (Lubin. Two reels. Thurs., Aug. 27.)—Full of disappearances and reappearances, seeming deaths and resurrections of the supposed dead, this two-reel drama is too complicated and involved to make a distinct and single impression on the mind of the spectator. The wild and lawless atmosphere of the Northwest pervades the story, and in a way, serves as an excuse for its indirectness and its lack of lucidity.

"Who Killed George Graves?" (Selig. Two reels. Mon., Aug. 31.)—This story of a murder with all the circumstantial evidence pointing to an innocent man as the guilty person, is cleverly and convincingly put together until the crucial scene is reached, and then the whole thing breaks down. The real murderer is one of the jurors and without rhyme or reason, he faints away during the trial and gives a deathbed confession of his own guilt. It is quite the right thing for him to do to make the story end pleasantly and within the allotted space, but is not what would have actually happened.

"The Lost Cord." (Vitagraph. Wed., Sept. 2.)—Highly entertaining comedy of the fat man who loses the support of his bathing trunks and of the thin man who loses his clothes and has to go home in the fat man's. The pretty girl gives zest to the picture by encouraging the rivals in their practical joking.

"By Whose Hand." (Lubin. Two reels. Wed., Sept. 2.)—A gripping and dramatic story built around a mysterious murder. Suspense is sustained until the very end when the true murderer is revealed in the person of the butler. The faithful butler had made away with a gambler who was blackmailing the son of his master.

"To Be Called For." (Selig. Wed., Sept. 2.)—Tender story of the country girl who has to do without the pretty clothes that she would so much like to have. In this instance she gets a beautiful dress, but just how she gets it had better be left untold, because the telling would destroy the interest in the picture.

"As It Is In Life." (Biograph. Reissue. Wed., Sept. 2.)—This title is somewhat misleading, because what happens in this picture is not as it is generally in life. When the time comes for the daughter to marry, it is nonsense for the father to think that he has got to give her up for good. And yet on this hinges the wholepoint of the story. Mary Pickford is the star.

Never Too Old." (Lubin. Split reel. Tues., Sept. 1.)—The dashing widow and the matrimonially eager old country loafer make some keen fun when they meet through an advertisement in a paper. The widow gets all that the prospective bridegroom has, and when her husband comes in she turns out to be not a widow, but very much married. On the same reel with "The Green Alarm."

"The Green Alarm." (Lubin. Split reel. Tues., Sept. 1.)—A parrott performs the services that the geese did for Rome in the early ages, but not for the head of a great government, but only for the owner of a chicken coop, when two desperate fowl-stealers break in. The alarm does the work and the police arrive on the scene of action in time to perform a gallant rescue of the hens. On the same reel with "Never Too Old."

"The Hidden Letters." (Vitagraph. Tues., Sept. 1.)—The letters come to light after the death of the husband's first wife and reveal her infelicity. The girl that has loved him all the time with supreme self-denial does not help him to learn this, although it would at once open the way to their marriage. The husband learns anyway, and he makes the girl his wife. The acting of Norma Talmadge, Julia Swayne Gordon and Antonio Moreno, heightens the intensity of the story.

"An Absentminded Cupid." (Edison. Mon., Sept. 7.)—An absentminded booklover, whose actions send one into roars of laughter, is the means of patching a petty quarrel of two lovers. William Wadsworth, Ed Boulden and Gladys Hulette are the principals.

"The Blind Fiddler." (Edison. Tues., Sept. 8.)—A beautiful fairy tale containing a fine moral. The old blind fiddler plays to the fairies in the forest. They will grant any wish he desires. He asks to be able to see. But after he regains his sight the world is not as pretty as he imagined, and he prefers to go back to darkness. Bigelow Cooper, Margaret McQuade and Viola Dana interpret this story in a charming manner.

"The Fuse of Death." (Kalem. Two reels. Wed., Sept. 9.)—Princess Mona Darkfeather plays the leading role in this stirring drama of Western life. The trader who tried to steal land belonging to Indians on which gold has been discovered meets a just fate when the Indian girl in revenge lights a fuse that leads to a barrel of powder and the house is blown up. The trader has been left inside in a drunken stupor.

"A Mother's Atonement." (Kalem. Tues., Sept. 8.)—The overwhelming desire of a mother to have her daughter marry wealth causes this tragedy of modern life. The daughter is obdurate and marries the poor man she loves, and misery and poverty follow quickly. The mother is obdurate and refuses help. Years afterward the granddaughter comes into the hard-hearted mother's life as a manicurist and age has now brought softening. She relents and receives her with open arms.

"Ham the Lineman." (Kalem. Fri., Sept. 11.)—Diverting and amusing is this burlesque of a jealous husband's suspicions of the foolish-looking lineman who comes to repair the telephone. It is up to Ruth Roland, who plays the wife, to pacify the irate husband and show him the error of his ways, but she doesn't get the chance until the house has been turned topsy-turvy by the efforts of husband and police to capture the suspected offender.

"Getting Andy's Goat." (Edison. Wed., Sept. 9.)—Andy buys an obstreperous goat and at once gets into trouble. But it happens that the goat is the cause of the finding of a valuable package that it was thought he had eaten, and thereafter Andy and his mother and the goat parade in their affluence, the pride of the neighborhood. The reward was considerable, it must be remembered.

"The Better Man." (Lubin. Fri., Aug. 28.)—Two brothers love the same woman, and the less deserving wins her, while the other has to go to jail through an unfortunate accident. In the end he proves that he is the better man, but goes back to prison, and the brother promises to be a kinder husband. A drama that combines strength of presentation with a sound moral.

"A Low Financier." (Selig. Split reel. Fri., Aug. 28.)—He is the sort of financier that demands payment in advance and then refuses to carry out his part of the contract. But no one can much blame him for running off, because what he agreed to do is to submit to the dissecting table. On the same reel with "Breaking Into Jail."

"Breaking Into Jail." (Selig. Split reel. Fri., Aug. 28.)—The breaking into jail is not for the purpose of a jail delivery, but to seek material for stories. Jim aspired to be a writer and thought that this would be a good way to see life at first hand. It is a very funny comedy. On the same reel with "A Low Financier."

"Such a Hunter." (Vitagraph. Fri., Aug. 28.)—John Bunny is in a new role, a reawakened Baron Munchausen. He talks mightily about his prowess as a hunter and the big game that he has bagged, but when a tame bear shows up, he runs like a scared rabbit and the bear simply eats out of the hand of his unboasting rival.

"Spending It Quick." (Biograph. Split reel. Sat., Aug. 29.)—Automobiles are fast things in more ways than one, and one helps to relieve the father's pocket of its superfluous weight of coin in rapid-fire order. The automobile jumps a precipice and then he has no money at all. On the same reel with "Baseball, a Grand Old Game."

"Baseball, a Grand Old Game." (Biograph. Split reel. Sat., Aug. 29.)—The many opportunities which the national game has afforded for burlesque, especially of the dyed-in-the-wool baseball crank, are taken advantage of in this picture. It is shown with "Spending It Quick."

"Broncho Billy's Indian Romance." (Essanay. Sat., Aug. 29.)—Tender love story of the Indian maiden who loves and loses. Broncho Billy is the idealized object of her affections, but his girl comes back to him when she learns that he is sick, and then there is no place for the little Indian.

"The Harbor of Love." (Selig. Sat., Aug. 29.)—Obvious story of the girl who refuses a man and then finds out too late that she really loves him. The man has then found his real heart's desire in a little fisher maiden.

"Josie's Coney Island Nightmare." (Vitagraph. Two reels. Sat., Aug. 29.)—Uproariously funny farce that details the laughable adventures of Josie and Hank on their first visit to the Island by the Sea. Josie dreams a dream of most undreamt things, and when she and Hank wake up, the tide has enveloped the seat of their slumbers.

"The Counterfeiter's Daughter." (Biograph. Mon., Aug. 31.)—A thrilling drama of the crook who reforms on account of his innocent-minded and unsuspecting daughter. The love interest is interwoven with the more serious events by the introduction of a handsome young detective who wins the heart of the girl.

"The Wrong Flat." (Vitagraph. Mon., Aug. 31.)—A comedy that just escapes being risqué and is none the less enjoyable on that account; the fact is, the peril that confronts a wife when she starts to take a bath in an apartment that is not hers and the lawful tenant's husband comes in and makes himself perfectly at liberty and at home, is thoroughly delightful.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

"The Bachelors' Housekeeper." (Crystal. Split reel. Tues., Sept. 8.)—On the same reel with "Was He a Hero?" The three bachelors all fall in love with their housekeeper, and then she introduces them to her husband. Rather an old idea.

"Was He a Hero?" (Crystal. Split reel. Tues., Sept. 8.)—On the same reel with "The Bachelors' Housekeeper." Dick, to gain permission for his marriage, places smoke bombs in his intended's house and then rescues her and her parents, thus gaining their good will. A conventional story containing little humor.

"A Bogus Baron." (Sterling. Tburs., Sept. 3.)—In which Ford Sterling dresses as a baron to win a girl for another man, but due to the usual sidesplitting mix-up one is at a loss as to whether be succeeds in his mission or not.

"Matty, the Universal Boy, No. 5." (Imp. Thurs., Sept. 10.)—In which Matty joins the boy police of New York and rounds up a band of boy crap shooters and cigarette smokers. A good moral to tbis picture, which will entertain young and old. A clever police dog performs.

"Curing a Lazy Wife." (Crystal. Tues., Sept. 1.)—Rather colorless. Vivian Prescott plays tbe lead. As a lazy wife she fools her husband, who tries to cure her. Quite a bit of actions transpires before he discovers she is faking.

"His Wife's Flirtations." (Sterling. Mon., Aug. 17.)—The gay wife of the country farmer flirts with every man she meets. A traveling salesman so arouses her husband's ire and the suspicions of tbe sheriff that a comical chase results.

"Universal Ike Nearly Gets Married." (Universal Ike. Tues., Sept. 8.)—Ike's would-be father-in-law thinks he has inherited a legacy and prepares to welcome him to his family, but it develops that it is a debt instead and Ike meets his Waterloo. Funny in parts.

"Little Meg and I." (Victor. Mon., Sept. 7.)—An excellent drama with J. Warren Kerrigan, Vera Sisson and George Periolat leading the cast. An old seaman tells his mates how he once loved a rich girl far above his station, and how their marriage was presented through the falsehood of schemers, which resulted in her suicide.

"Boy." (Eclair-Universal. Two reels. Wed., Sept. 9.)—The leads are played by Alec B. Francis and Willie Jackson. The picture is a pathetic one and will be enjoyed more by the deep thinkers and better educated. Due to his drinking habits, Jerry's wife leaves him and takes her boy with her. Jerry, frantic without bis cbild, enters the church and becomes a priest. His son returns and acts as choir boy. Later the boy returns to his mother; he is taken ill, and when his father reaches bim, dies. Husband and wife fail to be reconciled. He returns to the monastery and she joins a nunnery.

"No Show for the Chauffeur." (Eclair-Universal. Sun., Sept. 6.)—An amusing comedy in which the wits of a man and woman are pitted against each other, with the man getting a shade the better of the argument. The chauffeur takes his master's place while be wins a wife posing as tbe chauffeur.

"The Phantom Light." (101 Bison. Two reels. Sat., Sept. 12.)—There are too many superfluous scenes in this old Indian legend to command continual attention, and it is doubtful if Indians used rifles at the time the legends originated. Big Moon promises his daughter to the man who returns from the mountain first with a deer. Two brothers set out on the mission. One, seeing the other is victor, kills bim. Later, all due to his villainy, the whole tribe is wiped out and he is consumed by fire, hence the phantom light which reminds all Indians of the tragedy.

"Under Arizona's Skies." (Frontier. Sun., Sept. 6.)—Because of his brave conduct in protecting two girls from a band of hostile Indians, the bandit is pardoned by the mayor of the town. Joe Franz and Dolly Larkin play the leads in this exciting drama.

"Jam and Jealousy." (Joker. Sat., Sept. 12.)—Jealous lovers, a pair of ridiculous boboes and a cop combine their forces and make this an uproarious comedy. Max Asber, Louise Fazenda, Bob Vernon, Gale Henry and William Franey play these characters.

"The Angel of the Camp." (Powers. Fri., Sept. 11.)—A beautiful story, but Ray Gallagher is hardly suited for a rough and ready cowboy's part. Edna Maison is the other lead. The picture tells bow tbe reformation of a "bad man" was brought about through the influence of a Salvation Army lass whom the Western town had learned to love.

"Beau and Hobo." (Joker. Wed., Sept. 9.)—The lover masquerades as a hobo in order to approach the girl of his heart, as her father is mucb adverse to his presence. Tbe girl mistakes a real hobo for bim and the consequences are quite funny. Ernest Shields and Mrs. Mattox are the principals.

"Feeding the Kitty." (Nestor. Fri., Sept. 11.)—Eddie Lyons and Victoria Forde create a good bit of fun in this picture. The young wife thinks her husband has gone out with the maid and a lot of trouble ensues until she finds that the maid is with a cop. Later hubby comes in, quite drunk, and dispels all her doubts on the maid question.

"A Daughter of the Plains." (Nestor. Wed., Sept. 9.)—Played by William Clifford, Sberman Bainbridge and Marie Walcamp. One seldom sees a Western containing so much action and such an absorbing plot. Marie is the sole survivor of the settlement after it has been attacked by Indians. She is found by Clifford, who takes her to his cabin, where she meets Bainbridge. Clifford falls in love with the girl and Bainbridge does his best to ruin their love affair. Later he is killed by the marauding reds and Clifford and Marie are left together.

MUTUAL PROGRAM

"The Milk-Fed Boy." (Majestic. Tues., Sept. 1.)—An amusing comedy-drama that will entertain the children. Johnnie's bringing up makes him cowardly, but when he sees his mother attacked by a tramp his cowardice soon leaves him, and he becomes a man in a minute.

"The Miner's Baby." (Reliance. Wed., Sept. 2.)—Played by Arthur Mackley, Florence Crawford and Richard Cummings. A simple but pathetic story. The old miner is indifferent to his baby until he thinks that it has been stolen, and sees his neighbor mourning the loss of his. Then his whole aspect changes.

"A Modern Othello." (Beauty. Tues., Sept. 1.)—A fine comedy. Excellent photography and scenes. Harry Pollard and Margarita Fischer in the leading parts. Hubby is jealous of his wife and when he mistakes a woman for a man and sees her in his wife's room, his rage is uncontrolable until he discovers the truth.

"Our Mutual Girl, No. 33." (Reliance. Mon., Aug. 31.)—In this chapter Dubar returns Margaret's jewels after wresting them from his brother, who commits suicide tbe moment after. A number of points of interest in New York are shown, including Washington Square, the U. S. Customs House, Wall street and Trinity Church and the New York Stock Exchange. Later Margaret sees Irvin S. Cobb, Will Irwin and Dubar embark for Europe as war correspondents.

"Bill Organizes a Union." (Komic. Sun., Aug. 30.)—This picture, which is number five of the "Bill" series, is an excellent comedy. Bill and all the other office boys in the building go on strike, beat up the scabs and employ a brainless person to fill Bill's job, who mixes things up so that Bill's boss is glad to take him back. Limburger cheese is introduced with deadly effect.

"Arty the Artist." (Thanhouser. Sun., Aug. 30.)—In which "Vic," the originator of Flooey and Axel, who appear in the New York World, is introduced. He creates a lot of fun and illustrates his abilities in this novel reel.

"The Keeper of the Light." (Princess. Fri., Aug. 28.)—Muriel Ostriche and Boyd Marshall lead the cast of this drama. The rich man is in love with the daughter of the lighthouse keeper, but his mother objects to the marriage. When thieves attempt to put out the light to wreck a ship she, with the man's aid, prevents them, but due to a bullet wound she dies.

"The Mascot." (Komic. Sun., Sept. 6.)—A real side-splitter with Fay Tincher, Max Davidson and Tod Browning in the leads. A great many laughs are furnished by Browning, who dresses as a Hindoo and threatens his coming father-in-law with death.

"Turned Back." (Reliance. Fri., Sept. 4.)—In which the poor working man who has robbed to save his child is prevented from further wrongdoing by coming face to face with his victim, an old friend, and a doctor, who cures his child and sets him upon the right road.

"Mildred's Doll." (Domino. Two reels. Thurs., Sept. 10.)—A highly pleasing offering in which the granddaughter of an old miner saves his gold by secreting it in her doll, so that the robbers are unable to find it. Suspense is held throughout this feature. Clever acting by George Osborne and Mildred Harris.

"His Winning Way." (Princess. Fri., Sept. 4.)—Father does not want his daughter to marry a poor man, and when he demands $10,000 from Nolan Gottyspile, who is courting her, it goes pretty hard with the young fellow. But he manages by a little high finance to raise the money, and just when more is demanded the news comes that he is the heir of a big fortune. Boyd Marsball, Mary Hall and Riley Chamberlain are cast in the main parts.

"Sierra Jim's Reformation." (Majestic. Tues., Sept. 8.)—The insuppressible Western bandit turns up again to be reformed by tbe smile and the word of a pretty girl. The bandit thereupon goes off across tbe Great Divide to begin a new life. Special mention should be made of the distinct and steady photography.

"The Sheriff's Choice." (Reliance. Wed., Sept. 9.)—A father is torn between paternal love and stern duty. His son has become a bandit and as the sheriff be must make an honest effort to capture. He does capture him, and gives him one chance to escape. Tbe son rides into the quicksands and perishes. The drama is tense in its dramatic quality, and the ending is entirely in keeping witb the characters, and yet it comes upon us as a surprise.

"O'Flanagan's Luck." (Royal. Sat., Sept. 5.)—A good funmaker of tbe rougb and tumble variety. The speed and rapidity of the movement allows no interval between the laugbs of those who are devoted to this kind of entertainment.

"The Silver Candlesticks." (Kay-Bee. Two reels. Fri., Sept. 11.)—Torino, a Spaniard, in order to save his child from deatb, steals the silver candlesticks from the altar of tbe church. But bis conscience bothers bim to such an extent that he returns tbem. The padre witnesses their return, and hears the man's prayer for the recovery of tbe cbild. He prays also, and the child, wbo is tbought to be dead, recovers. The scenes are tbe strong point in this drama. It will appeal more to the serious minded.

"A Brand New Hero." (Keystone. Sat., Sept. 5.)—In which Roscoe Arbuckle rescues the chief's daughter from the water and is created an officer of the force. Numerous times do villainous rivals plot his downfall but he comes through with flying colors. A good many laughs in this.

"His New Profession." (Keystone. Mon., Aug. 31.)—Charles Chaplain appears in tbis picture and, as usual, whenever he appears it is a laugh throughout. He gets a job wheeling a cripple around, but a pretty girl, a beggar and a furious young nepbew cause his downfall and much merriment.

"The Baggage Smasher." (Keystone. Thurs., Sept. 3.)—Chester C. Conklin disports himself in this picture to the great amusement of all. He assumes the role of baggage smasher and gets into a lot of trouble with two honeymooners.

"The Song of the Sea Shell." (American. Fri., Aug. 28.)—Beautiful photography and scenes. The story is rather obscurely put. The shepherd dreams that his sweetheart has run away with a city man, but he awakes and finds her standing beside him. Ed Coxen, George Field and Charlotte Burton play the leads.

NEWS WEEKLIES

"Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 52." (Selig. Thurs., Aug. 27.)—We are carried from Mexico to the seat of the gigantic war in Europe in this issue, but to relieve the depressing feeling that the sights of war might cause, we are given views of the more peaceable pursuits, such as horse-racing, automobile racing, and golfing.

"Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 53." (Selig. Mon., Aug. 31.)—The photography of this issue is entirely up to the standard set by this pictorial review. Among the events chronicled in pictures are a baby show and an exciting baseball game between pennant contenders.

"TEMPTATION"

(Warner's—Three Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS is a picture of English make, and the producers have put before the public an exciting melodrama full of sensational scenes well placed, which will keep the spectators' interest whetted throughout. It is a picture in which the villain and the struggling hero battle for supremacy, and, thanks to the latter's beloved, he is the victorious one.

The action of the picture is rapid from the start, nor does it let up at all until the last scene. While the acting may not be of the most excellent variety and the events which transpire are slightly miraculous, still there are not many people that will not enjoy it and be absorbed by its thrilling train of incidents.

The story opens showing a young man who is busy on inventing a new variety of torpedo, and he is so enwrapped in his work that he forgets his sweetheart. His rival in love and business attempts to steal his secret but is thwarted by the owner after a fine battle in the dark, but the inventor is severely injured while the other makes his escape.

Many times after does he attempt to rob Jack of his invention which leads to daring rides on the top of swaying freight cars, a thrilling holdup and an escape from the train, motorboat chases and finally the complete destruction of the villain and his aides by the mechanism with which they planned to destroy Jack and his sweetheart—a powerful bomb.

And after it is all over and Jack's invention is a success, he returns to his home village with Lucy and claims her as his bride.

This is certainly a stirring film, one that will keep the house breathless, due to the thrilling episodes in which it revels. The photography and scenes are good, and cause each scene to be so much stronger.

"THE HEIR OF THE LAGARDES"

(Titan Film Corp.—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

LIKE all films of foreign manufacture, this one excels in artistry and photography, and this is the most notable feature of the picture, although the acting is of the best variety and the story a fine one.

The scenes of the production, the majority of which are laid with great care and due, in all probability to their great depth, furnish a striking stereoptic effect, which is none too common in the average motion picture. The figures seem to stand out with unusual clearness, apart from their backgrounds, so that one seems to be looking more at flesh-and-blood persons rather than their counterparts.

The picture takes place at the time when Louis XVI held sway over France, and the elegant costumes that the characters are seen wearing conform with the period, and are even as beautiful as the sets and photography.

That the production is the finished work of an artistic director is plainly obvious, and that a cast of finished dramatic artists perform is just as noticeable. They come from the best dramatic companies of France, and prove by their acting here that they are worthy of the Comedie Francais, the Odeon and the Sarah Bernhardt theatres.

Their performing is of the French variety, but contrary to the usual case, none of the parts are overdone; true, the acting is of the emotional variety, but it is not prominent. In other words, it is acting of the best sort. The cast consists of M. Ravet, Berthe Bovy, Mille Goldstein, Georges Vague and M. Godeau.

One of the first public showings that the picture received was at the Tokeneke Country Club, Rowaten, Conn., where a number of club members enjoyed it and appreciated it to its fullest extent. And it is just such an audience that will admire the picture most. Those who love nothing but lightning action and sensational happenings will not be so well pleased with it, as it contains little rapid action.

But those who know a well acted picture when they see it, and who are any way artistically inclined, are those who will take pleasure in witnessing it.

But it is not entirely devoid of action as several realistic duel scenes are introduced, and some of the actors often demonstrate their abilities as swordsmen in startling and exciting moments.

The story: Because of a grievance of a one-time friend the heir of the Lagardes is kidnapped and is thought by his mother to be dead, but after exciting events have taken place and the heir has been through many hands and adventures, he returns to his own amid the great rejoicing of his friends.

"SHADOWS"

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE
(Imp-Universal—Two Reels)

A THOROUGHLY safe line of praise to offer in regard to this picture is that such a thing has never been attmpted or accomplished with success before the present time. A few years ago, or perhaps even a year back, the idea would have been pooh-poohed and ridiculed as an utter impossibility—that one man should impersonate all the characters of a play in which there are ten.

Some years ago an actor in the legitimate field, Henri De Vries, impersonated fine characters in a police court trial play and received universal praise for his cleverness. But his acting, while compelling admiration, was of no higher merit than King Baggott's in "Shadows."

But it has been done with great success by King Baggot. He actually portrays ten different characters, in most every scene, two of which are on together, and one, exceptionally well executed, in which he appears three times.

In a way it is the marvelous technical powers of motion picture photography that permits this feat to be executed. But in a larger sense it is the great versatility of Mr. Baggot, together with his splendid ability of make-up, character portrayal and individual technical understanding, that is responsible for the realization of this picture.

The story is not merely introduced as a side issue, either; it is a good one. The wayward son accused of robbing his father, but at length being exonerated through the efforts of a detective.

The entire production is certainly a masterpiece of work both in regard to the art of the photographer and the "cast," both in a technical and dramatic sense. It is a picture that all will appreciate, and realize the amount of labor and time that it must have demanded.

United Makes Record in Seven Months

Handling of Kellermann Picture a Sample of What the Firm Has Done —Manufacturing Report Emphatically Denied

THE United Booking Office Feature Picture Company, Inc., has made substantial strides since its inception seven months ago and has booked box-office winners in the film game that entitles it to consideration among film exhibitors.

The company wishes to enter an emphatic denial of the report that it would embark in the manufacture of films upon any scale. The United Booking Office Feature Film Company, Inc., is going to devote all its attention to the booking end, sending out efficient judges to inspect personally every feature film turned out by European and American factories and placing those deemed worthy of booking upon the list available for exhibitors.

This photoplay booking concern does not intend to show any theatre discrimination with its pictures. The company will book with anyone and everyone and stands ready to make every effort to give the exhibitors feature films that will bring results into the box offices.

The concern is now booking a large circuit of theatres and stands ready to guarantee more consecutive weeks than anyone else in the booking business. In all branches of the photoplay promotion and booking the United Booking Office Feature Picture Company, Inc., has thoroughly experienced men employed to give the exhibitors, theatres and films their attention.

In handling the booking for the Annette Kellermann feature film, "Neptune's Daughter," the company established photoplay box-office records that will stand for some time to come. The Kellermann picture played fourteen weeks at the Globe Theatre, New York; ten weeks at the Nixon Theatre, Pittsburgh, and is now in its twenty-second week at Fine Arts Theatre, Chicago, in addition to playing road dates en route.

This feature is only one of many big features the company is handling on the booking list. The company has out its judging corps making daily inspection of the hundreds of films that are constantly being turned out for film presentation in New York and elsewhere.

Werba and Luescher, New York Theatre Building, New York City, has, in addition to purchasing the New York state rights for "Manon Lescaut," obtained the state rights for New Jersey.

BUFFALO EXCHANGE MEN IN NEW YORK

J. M. Sitterly and J. Robson Stevens, members of Stevens Attractions, 15 Chapin Block, Buffalo, N. Y., are now in New York City and are looking over the feature business here. They report that the feature business has been unusually profitable in Buffalo during the summer months.

On the first of September these two men will organize the International Vaudeville Company, covering the Eastern States and Canada. Clara Urwin, who will hold the position of general manager of this concern, is now visiting Canada obtaining bookings with which to start the new concern.

KLEINE BUYS ATSCO SCREEN

A Radium Gold screen was recently purchased from Atsco, Inc., by George Kleine for use in the private projection room of his company in connection with one of the Kleine special lens.

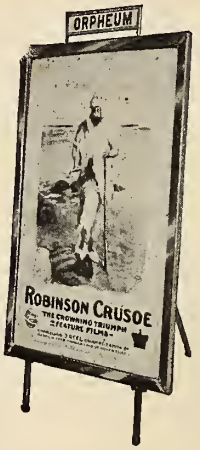
VAUDEVILLE TEAM IN PICTURE SKETCH

The famous vaudeville team of Ben Deely and Marie Wayne, who for more than ten years presented the sketch, "The New Bellboy," on the Orpheum and the Keith circuits, recently decided to enter the motion picture field and are now at work for the Balboa Amusement Producing Company, at the Long Beach, Cal., studios of that corporation. While in vaudeville, Mr. Deely evolved ideas for presentation in films a series of comedy releases around the adventures of one "Ima Simp, Detective," and he secured the services of William Wolbert, for many months a director of Joker comedies for the Universal Company, as director of the new Balboa comedy aggregation.

Charles Dudley, long associated with the Keystone, Monopol and Universal players, who has been a member of the Balboa's organization since it was formed, is one of the fun-makers working with Deely and Wayne. Others are Henry Stanley, a veteran actor; Archie Warren, Brent Carruthers, Suzanne Rogers, Robert Barrow and Alice Brookton. Percy de Gaston is camera man for the new company.



SEES BRIGHT FALL OUTLOOK

The Newman Manufacturing Company, which operates three factories, one at 717 Sycamore street, Cincinnati, Ohio,; one at 101 Fourth avenue, New York City, and another at 108 W. Lake street, Chicago, Ill., manufacturers of brass frames, railings, easels, etc., are reporting excellent business, and are running full capacity. Its salesmen report an encouraging outlook for fall business.

The Western, Central and Southern States particularly are showing marked improvement in business conditions, and the Eastern and New England States will come along in due time.

"It is remarkable the number of new theatres which are now in the course of construction, mostly large and attractive theatres," says S. J. Newman, secretary of the firm, who has a wide acquaintance among theatre owners. He reports that the majority are of the impression that business conditions will show a great improvement this coming fall.

Independent Board of Trade Organized

At Meeting Held at the Hotel McAlpin, New York, August 29, William Fox, the Prime Mover, Is Elected President

IN response to an appeal issued by William Fox, president of the William Fox Amusement Company, independent manufacturers, exchange men and exhibitors, convened at the Hotel McAlpin, New York City, at 11 a.m., on Saturday, August 29, and organized the National Independent Motion Picture Board of Trade, which procured articles of incorporation on the Thursday previous to the meeting.

The following paragraph from the articles of incorporation relates the express objects of the organization:

"To foster trade and commerce and the interests of those engaged either as manufacturers, distributors and exhibitors of motion pictures, to reform abuses relative thereto, to secure freedom from unjust or harmful exactions, to eliminate unfair competition and restraint of trade, and combinations in restraint of trade, to obtain legislation necessary to correct certain present harmful conditions to the motion picture business, and to regulate trade and commerce in that business so that the same shall be free, open, unrestrained and fair to all; to diffuse accurate and reliable information as to the standing of manufacturers, distributors and exhibitors and other matters, to procure uniformity and certainty in the customs and usages of trade and commerce, to obtain a standardization of machines, films, appliances and appurtenances to the said business, to settle and arbitrate differences between and among its members, and to promote a marked enlarged and friendly intercourse between and among the members thereof."

The number of motion picture men present at the convention was small compared to the numbers represented in the board. Those who were unable to attend in person sent their regrets, sincere co-operation and checks to advance the cause. It is estimated that almost $75,000,000 of capital was represented, although those present numbered only a hundred.

The following officers were elected at the meeting: President, William Fox, of the William Fox Amusement Company; vice-presidents, A. H. Sawyer, of Sawyer, Inc.; J. M. Shear, Solax Company; H. M. Horkeimer, Balboa Feature Films; B. K. Bimberg, Schuyler Amusement Company; H. S. Schwalbe, Electric Theatre Supply Company; treasurer, Winfield R. Sheehan, Box Office Attractions Company; secretary, Jesse L. Goldberg, Life Photo Film Corporation.

The directors are: William Fox, L. J. Selznick, World Film Corporation; A. H. Sawyer; H. M. Horkeimer, and Winfield R. Sheehan, of the Box Office Attractions Company.

The Committee on Revision of By-Laws; William Fox, L. J. Selznick, A. H. Sawyer, Arthur N. Smallwood, Smallwood Film Company, and Edward Roskam, of the Life Photo Film Company.

The Executive Committee consists of the officers and directors; four more of the latter are to be elected by the Executive Committee.

All three divisions of the motion picture trade were well represented at the gathering. Those present were: George K. Rolands, Roland Feature Film Company; Howard E. Spaulding, Paramount Pictures Corporation; J. M. Shear, Solax; H. M. Scott, Sterling Camera and Film Company; Mark M. Dintenfass, Victor Film Company; F. E. Holliday, Bob Ray; B. A. Busch, World Film Corporation; M. Friedman, Playgoers; Percy R. Weinich, Manhattan Feature Film Company; Eugene Elmore, Illustrative Amusement Company; Sam Trigger, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League; E. Peter, Texas Film Corporation; Thomas J. Beardmore and S. M. Gardenheim, Greater New York Film Rental Company; L. E. Replugh, Standard Film Company; and Eberhard Schneider, German-American Cinematograph.

Others were: Frank L. Dear, Select Photo Play Company; J. E. Monroe, F. and C. Film Company; W. A. Landan, L. and B. Amusement Company; A. Bauerfreud, Model Theatre; W. H. Linton, Hippodrome Theatre; Charles A. Gunby, Gunby Brothers; J. A. Leroy, Acme Exchange; J. W. Ostrow, Niagara Feature Film Company; D. H. Turner, Alaska Film Company; Charles Perb, Box Office Attractions; H. R. Applebaum, Eastern Feature Film Company; Maurice Fox, William Fox Amusement Company; James Carleton, Carleton Enterprises; Ben H. Zew, Jack Loeb, John Allen, R. Wennick, T. G. Proleau, George Gronaro, M. Davis, L. Rosenbluh, C. E. Corwin and Paul M. Prince, of the Prince Film Laboratory.

POPULARIZED FILMS IN FRANCE

George Davis, of the New York exchange of Warner's Features, Inc., was a pioneer in making the motion picture popular in France. Fourteen years ago Mr. Davis and a partner got hold of a film entitled "La Passion" and traveled with it through the land of the fleur de lis. Wherever they stopped they hung up a sign bearing the legend "American Electric Palace," whereupon the inhabitants tumbled over each other to see the show.

That was in the very early days of motion pictures. It didn't take much of a film to get the money, and Mr. Davis's picture commanded an admission fee of one to two francs (20 to 40 cents). He says that nobody would even look at such a picture nowadays.

Mr. Davis left last Saturday for Cuba in the interests of Warner's Features, Inc. The intention of the company is to establish an exchange in Havana.

PLAN BALL IN CAPITAL

Thomas M. Eastwood, special representative of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of the District of Columbia, visited New York this week in behalf of the Washington organization.

The officers of the League, to awaken new and more profitable local interest in motion pictures has decided upon a ball to be held in the near future. This will be representative of the entire industry.

Mr. Eastwood's mission was to interest manufacturers in the proposition to secure their endorsement and support.

HEARD IN THE LOBBIES

The American Theatre, one of the first playhouses to be erected in the downtown district of San Francisco, following the fire of 1906, and which has been closed for the past year, is to be reopened at an early date, probably about the first of October. It is the present plan to reopen the house with moving pictures and later add musical comedy. The theatre is now undergoing extensive repairs under the direction of Edward Homan, who will have charge of the new venture.

The Franklin Theatre, located on Franklin street, near the narrow gauge depot, Oakland, Cal., is in about a completed form and will be opened at an early date. This is one of the finest of Oakland's new photoplay houses and is pioneering in a new district.

The Linden Theatre on Seventh street, Oakland, Cal., has been opened by G. A. Williams, after having been closed for quite a period. Strong programs are now being offered and the attendance so far has been quite satisfactory.

"The Autocrat," in which a mother dreams, after punishing her little son, that she is brought before a child tribunal and charged with "exercising tyrannical authority" is the title and subject matter of a picture now being staged under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham, director of the Universal Powers Company.

Among the well-known characters that have appeared in the Universal Boy series in which Matty Rouhert plays the leading part, is Justice Saunders, well known in judicial and political circles in New York.

George McCool and George Rogers, and Manager and Mrs. Van Husan, of the Laemmle Film Service Co., of Omaha, have returned from a vacation at Lake Okaboji, Iowa. While there Manager Van Husan had a delightful visit with A. K. Pay, manager of a theatre at Soo Falls, South Dakota.

"MONSIEUR LECOQ"

(Leading Players—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

WHEN it comes to detective plays we must yield the palm to the French. The Detective Bureau of Paris has developed the most advanced and scientific methods for tracking down criminals in the world, and it is no wonder, therefore, that mystifying and perplexing detective plays should come from that land.

THE DUKE SURPRISES THE RUFFIANS

It is not along the comprehensive system by which the Paris police trail down the ingenious criminals with whom they have to contend that gives a working basis for these dramas. The adaptability and the shrewd penetration of individual members of the force in any set of circumstances that may arise supply the novelty and the surprises.

Monsieur Lecoq is a typical French detective, keen, alert, daring, never at a loss to act, no matter what happens. The test for his deductive powers is to discover the identity of a man who has been captured in a raid on a ruffians' den, and who steadily refuses to reveal himself. There is some reason behind this secrecy, the detective well knows, and he is not long finding it out.

He accomplishes his purpose by allowing the unknown prisoner to escape, and then trails him. The mysterious masquerader is in reality the Duke of Sairmuse, who has disguised himself to protect his wife from the blackmailers, and gets captured for his pains. That the story of the Duchess's brother, which the blackmailers were holding over her head, may not become public, the Duke maintains his veil of mystery.

It seems as if Monsieur Lecoq has been baffled, but not unless our confidence in his superior powers be greatly exaggerated. He proves his supreme ability when we least expect it; for by means of letters from the Duke's servant, Otto, he gains the knowledge that he needs of the Duke's part in the adventure.

Monsieur Devalance impersonates Lecoq with full appreciation of the task before him, and always with an eye to making the resourcefulness and the ingenuity of the detective seem absolutely natural.

There have been no increases in the prices of the necessities by the exchanges, even though the wholesalers advise of a marked advance in the East. It is believed there is a sufficient supply in Los Angeles to accommodate the demands for the next five or six months.

"WHILE FIRE RAGED"

(Eclectic—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

NINE out of ten times that a conflagration aboard an ocean liner is produced we see it break out suddenly in all parts of the ship. Where it has originated and how it spreads with such great rapidity is left to the imagination, and one has to be possessed with an exceptional elastic fancy to imagine how the fire started.

But such is not the case in regard to the fire scene staged in this picture; it is most realistic. It starts in the hold, where for a time the crew is unable to hold it in check; the smoke spreads among the passengers of the steerage and creates a panic. And here it may be said that the scene in the steerage quarter of the ship, with all the passengers lying packed together on the floor, is well put on.

This fire does not consume the entire ship; in fact, it is put out, and only a small amount of smoke reaches the first-cabin passengers, just enough to create quite a disturbance.

As most all the scenes of the production take place on board ship, not a very extensive variety is obtained, but all parts of the vessel are introduced, and all seem to be well done and realistic. A glimpse of the boiler-room is given, with the stokers busily coaling the huge engines; then again the scene in the hold, where the sailors are fighting to smother the flames, creates quite a thrill. In marked contrast to these two is the scene in the first-cabin saloon, where the members, gorgeously clothed, are to be seen gaily dining. This is a most carefully laid and large set, although only a few glimpses of it are shown.

Two very well-known stars perform, both of whom, although foreigners, have already established a name for themselves in this country as well as abroad. They are Rene Alexandre and Gabrielle Robinni, of the Comedie Francais, Paris. These two play the principal parts excellently.

M. Alexandre, who plays the part of Wallace, the first mate on his father's ship, falls in love with the fair Gaby (Mlle. Robinni), and it is no wonder, as she and the girl of his father's choice are incomparable.

But the dancer conforms to the father's wishes and leaves the young man, much against her own will, and leaves him to marry the girl of the family's selection, but only after the former had saved the lives of all on board the ship by entertaining them while the fire was being extinguished.

INTERESTING FILM REVIEWS

"Mutual Weekly, No. 88."—This is in part a "war" number, the pictures coming from London. Among the illustrations are: German reservists at their consulate in that city; scenes in Trafalgar square; crowds waiting for news before Parliament; territorials leaving for the front; and American tourists stranded in the British metropolis. Numerous other interesting pictures are shown, such as the florists' convention at Boston and a daring girl riding an aquaplane through the Hell Gate currents.

"Animated Weekly, No. 130."—The first picture shows President Wilson. Then follows a film showing Canadian troops mobilizing in Vancouver, British Columbia; another records the war demonstration in Trafalgar square; a review of the Kaiser's troops in Koenigsberg. Other pictures show refugees arriving in New York from the war zone.

ECLAIR SCIENTIA

"The Holy Land." (Eclair. Sun., Aug. 23.)—Beautiful views of the land where the Savior lived and died. Jerusalem and its flat-topped houses, the now desolate Mount of Olives, the peaceful Lake of Tiberias, and the restless waves of the Sea of Gallilee, even the very waters from which the fishermen drew their miraculous catch, are caught with the unerring eye of the camera.

"Through Historic Greece." (Eclair. Split reel. Sun., Aug. 30.)—The ruins of Athens' supreme achievements in architecture make a sad picture. That so much beauty must crumble away, disfigured so that the once perfect outlines are almost lost, or even sunk into the dust of the earth, is an oppressing commentary on the changeableness of things. The reel is completed with "Hermit Crabs."

"Hermit Crabs." (Eclair. Split reel. Sun., Aug. 30.)—These long-legged, weird creatures give one an uncanny feeling even in pictures. They are smaller than ordinary crabs, and are called hermits because they make their homes in the shells of other animals, driving out or devouring them. They are very unsociable, and will fight among themselves, especially over prey. Along with the crabs are shown certain anemones that they frequently feed on.

HEARD IN THE LOBBIES

On August 30 "Cabiria" opened at the Ziegfeld Theatre, Chicago, Ill., for an indefinite engagement. Previous to this date the picture played at the Illinois Theatre, but the opening of the regular dramatic season necessitated this change.

"Neptune's Daughter" has opened its seventeenth consecutive week at the Fine Arts Theatre, Chicago, Ill. Abundant patronage still continues.

The Photo Drama Company's feature "After the Ball," featuring Herbert Kelcey and Effie Shannon, opened at the Wieting Opera House, Syracuse, N. Y., on Monday night, August 24. The house was packed the first night and did great business for a week.

"Cabiria" opened a two weeks' engagement on August 31 at Harmanus Bleecker Hall, Albany's largest theatre. Good size crowds have been visiting the theatre nightly. This is the first time a film will have run two weeks at one theatre in Albany, and the fact that it is such a success is puzzling to many managers of the local motion picture theatres. And still more puzzling is the fact that people are paying as high as fifty cents to see this picture.

The popularity of Mary Pickford in Albany, N. Y., was again apparent when "The Eagle's Mate" was put on at Proctor's Leland for three days. Crowded houses were the rule at every one of the afternoon performances, but at night the "standing room only" sign was tacked up all the time. The crowds were so great that the people were standing out in the middle of the street, trying to get in.

The Junior Circle of the King's Daughters gave a motion picture show a few nights ago in Crystall Hall, Bardstown, Ky. This was the first time that the members used the motion picture as a medium for raising money for charitable purposes, and the event was a success.

SOLDIERS OPEN THEATRE TO CHARLESTON VISITORS

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Charleston, S. C., Sept. 2.

The 16, 78, 144 and 145 companies of the United States Coast Artillery, stationed at Fort Moultrie, on Sullivan's Island, near Charleston, have established a motion picture theatre on the reservation, which, while intended primarily for the entertainment of the enlisted men, has been thrown open to the several thousands of people of Charleston and surrounding country who have their summer homes on Sullivan's Island and the large number of visitors to Charleston's famous beach resort, the Isle of Palms.

The soldiers have devised an open air theatre for the summer months, and quite an attractive place it is, which occupies a place on the beach. It is so arranged that those who do not care for seats in chairs may sit on the huge granite blocks of the bulkhead that stretches along the beach in front of the forts.

Music is furnished by the Coast Artillery band, and from eight to ten reels of pictures are shown of an evening. The promoters of the enterprise are enthusiastic over the undertaking, having shown to capacity audiences at every performance.

AVERT FIRE PANIC

Waterbury, Sept. 5.

The Star Theatre, on Baldwin street, was the scene of a near panic last week. "The Million Dollar Mystery" was being shown on the evening in question and some 800 patrons were present.

The night was warm and the exhaust fans were started. The "hot boxes" became over-heated, and dense volumes of smoke issued forth. Someone raised the cry of "fire," and the audience started for the doors. Cool-headed attaches of the theatre, however, shouted reassuring news and the panic wave subsided.

UNIVERSAL WAR SCENES ARRIVE

The S.S. "Baltic," which arrived recently, brought over the first 2,000 feet of negative of the war situation in and around London, Paris and Berlin.

Many of the exciting scenes show the troops kissing their relatives and friends good-bye, heavy artillery on the move and boats loaded.

Among the films is a picture of a Zeppelin airship. This same airship has been reported as captured, after doing much damage to the enemy on the firing line.

These scenes are to be shown in the coming Animated Weekly.

Court Won't Forbid Building of Theatre

Motion Picture Not Offensive in Itself, Declares Philadelphia Judge, and Therefore Injunction Must Be Denied—Issues Warning

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Philadelphia, Sept. 3.

JUDGE AUDENRIED this week refused to issue an injunction against the construction of "The Blue Bird" moving picture theatre on Broad street above Susquehanna avenue, but warned the promoters that they must conduct their business in such a manner that it will not disturb Dr. John A. Boger, who has a residence on the adjoining lot, at 2213 North Broad street.

Doctor Boger asked for the injunction on the ground that the lot was under restrictions; that it cannot be used for "offensive business." He contended that a moving picture place would be offensive on account of the noise. The promoters alleged that the building would be so constructed as to prevent noises penetrating the walls.

Judge Audenried said in his opinion that a moving picture place is not an "offensive business" in itself, but might become offensive.

"Whether that which the defendants expect to set up will become a nuisance," continued His Honor, "depends to some extent on the precaution taken by them in constructing their building to prevent any noise arising in the conduct of their theatre from penetrating into adjoining houses. Primarily, however, everything depends on the amount of noise the performances in the theatre will occasion.

"While, for the reasons above indicated, the plaintiff's motion will be dismissed, the defendants must understand thoroughly that he is entitled to the enjoinment of his property free from annoyance of a substantial character and without unreasonable interference with his comfort as the result of the use to which their property is put by them or their tenants; and that they will carry on their projected moving picture exhibition at their peril. The conduct of the theatre in such a manner as to constitute a nuisance or violate the restriction against offensive business on their land, will, upon proper application by the plaintiff, result in the immediate issuance by the court of an injunction to prevent the continuance of the acts complained of."

NASHVILLE FILMS FOR FAIR

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Nashville, Tenn., Sept. 2.

A panoramic view of Nashville was taken here this week by a motion picture machine from the extreme top of the state capitol. It will be a portion of the 20,000-foot picture that will be shown in the Tennessee building of the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco next year.

The picture was taken by Otto Gilmore, an expert camera man of the Bon Ray Film Company, New York,

TRADING STAMPS USED IN LOS ANGELES THEATRES

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Los Angeles, Aug. 31.

Fourteen Los Angeles motion picture theatres—including the Garrick and Butler's, downtown houses charging five cents admission—have adopted the most recent disguise of trading stamps as a trade puller.

The new habit-forming creation is known as "Scrip" and may be exchanged for railroad or steamship transportation at the rate of "a mile in travel for a dollar in trade." Scrip good for a tenth of a mile is the smallest denomination of the premium.

As the new feature has just been added, local managers are not as yet in position to say whether it is a business builder or an opportunity to extend a lot of screen advertising to a proposition valuable to big stores.

WILL FILM STEEL WORKS

The United States Steel Corporation is arranging to have motion pictures taken of the big plants in Pittsburgh and surrounding towns. At McKeesport, where one of the largest buildings of the corporation is located, the company will have the playgrounds and swimming pools, built for the convenience of the employees, filmed and displayed throughout the country.

One of the purposes of having the pictures taken is to attract the attention of workmen in other parts of the country to Pittsburgh.

No matter how thrilling a story one may read, interest is not sustained if poor type, poor paper and poor press work make hard work for the eyes. It's the same with motion pictures. A clear picture is as necessary as a good scenario.

Because the basic product is right, the clearest pictures are on "Eastman" film. Look for the stencil mark in the margin.

10,000 people daily are being turned away from the GRAND THEATRE, New York, who cannot be accommodated to see Mme. SARAH ADLER, in

"Sins of the Parents"

An overwhelming success both artistically and financially.

A wonderful dramatic story, the strength of which over shadows the unquestioned ability of a great cast, is the universal verdict of the dramatic critics.

It Thrills, Entertains and Convinces

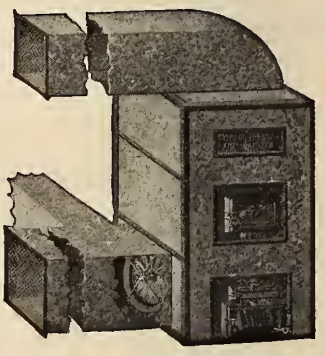
Ventilation Cooling Heating

Heating and cooling problem revolutionized by Typhoon System.



You keep cool in front of a desk fan, not in back; apply this common sense and blow the air into your theatre.

A 48-inch Typhoon Multiblade Blower has sixteen blades, an ordinary exhaust fan has six; it is the blades that do the business.

A Typhoon Tubular Air Warmer will heat and ventilate at the same time.

The low price of effective apparatus will surprise you. Catalogue "N" gives information.

ONE, THREE AND SIX SHEET POSTERS

Lubin Manufacturing Company, Philadelphia, Pa.

Chicago Office:
154 West Lake Street

Quality Counts

There is as much difference in the quality of Portrait Posters as there is between a Mexican dollar and one of the good old United States.

The Mexican dollar is worth just half its face value—fifty cents—and the cheap, tawdry, weak looking, so-called portrait poster, made by unofficial manufacturers is not worth EVEN HALF WHAT IS CHARGED FOR IT.

The Universal exhibitor has a chance to decorate his front—to make it look different than the average picture theatre—to give it the snappy air of prosperity and put it in the front rank of picture theatres, if he will "use the brains God gave him" and

Demand Morgan Posters

The difference between "Morgan Posters" and the other kind is the same as the difference between the Mexican dollar and the United States kind: only that the other poster don't even look good, whereas the Mexican dollar does.

PUT YOUR MONEY WHERE IT WILL SHOW

and don't put cheap, imitation posters outside of your theatre. Every "MORGAN" portrait poster is made with six colors and reproduced from fine oil paintings costing as high as $700.00. The cheap portrait poster is made only from a photograph. Enough said.

IT PAYS TO BUY GOOD POSTERS

It is an investment and your patrons can see you are alive. You are putting your money where it will show and the returns will be 100 per cent.

You can get MORGAN portrait posters of every Universal star from your exchange—Be sure and ask for the "MORGAN" kind. If your exchange does not carry them write to the Outlawry in romantic guise—the relentless trail of the law's vendetta—and at last "the price" is paid. It's a picture that fascinates. The bold exploits of the outlaw lady, the great train robbery, the wild pursuit of fleeing bandits—these are but hints of the big human story this film tells. Beautiful photography—a superb cast—a wonderful setting.

The PRICE of CRIME

To Motion Picture Exhibitors:

"A success!"

The "idea" back of the Paramount Plan was fundamentally right. Therefore, it was only natural that it would prove successful.

There was never the slightest question in our minds that we were on the right track, and every Exhibitor we have seen and talked with has quickly grasped the possibilities to him -- possibilities with a dollars and cents meaning.

This is not idle talk. We have letters in our file showing that Exhibitors consider it a privilege and an opportunity to sign the Paramount contract. Already hundreds of Exhibitors, from every part of the United States, have contracted for the Paramount Program. When the plan is fully explained, the progressive Exhibitor sees in it a chance to make his the highest grade motion picture house possible. Naturally, that is synonymous with success -- profits and prosperity.

The Exhibitor now knows that the Paramount plan is not merely a pack of promises -- he has now seen Paramount pictures and Paramount Publicity. He has found out that Paramount has not stopped with the Exhibitor - he has seen Paramount go right on to the Public, the men, women and children who patronize the Paramount He has seen that the Paramount appeal is to the better class. He realizes that Paramount has a Purpose, and it is now very plain to him that the purpose is to educate that part of the hundred million individuals in the United States who can afford to spend not less than a dime, and up to half a dollar, to the better class of motion pictures. He has seen that only the better class of pictures are included in the Paramount Program, and that the better class magazines having a national circulation are being used to exploit Paramount Pictures.

If you have not yet investigated the Paramount Plan, it is high time that you do so -- it behooves you to negotiate immediately, if profits are an inducement to you.

If your house is a success now, Paramount Pictures in it will make it a greater success.

Circulation That Counts

WHEN the motion picture business first started, it was necessary that a trade journal should obtain its circulation largely through the newsstands.

Most exhibitors would not subscribe. There were several reasons for this. But one main reason covers them all. The business was not settled enough.

TO-DAY it is.

To-day the exhibiting business is one of the largest and most substantial in the country. Millions are invested in it, and more millions are being added each month. It has a permanency—a settled future.

The successful theatre of to-day is planned and run on systematic business methods. The successful exhibitor of to-day is building for to-morrow; he has faith in to-morrow.

AND with this change in the exhibitor business has come a new era in trade journal circulation.

The exhibitor now buys his paper by the year.

He wants it regularly and on time.

He keeps each number on file.

The yearly subscription is a part of his business routine and economy.

THIS is of decided advantage all around to the exhibitor, the advertiser and the publisher. To the advertiser it means most—much more than at first thought he appreciates.

He can buy subscription circulation with an absolute certainty of what he is getting. Only with such a circulation can he know what he is getting. With newsstand circulation he buys hopefully, but blindly—absolutely blindly.

IT is to be assumed, of course, that when a paper is built from cover to cover for the exhibitor, the exhibitor will buy it.

But, granted that he does, the public also buys it, and so do the many who are indirectly interested in the industry, though they, too, mean nothing to the advertiser of pictures or equipment.

"TRUE," says the advertiser, "but then the excess circulation doesn't hurt me any. These readers don't book pictures nor buy equipment, but they learn about my goods and it all helps a little."

THIS is a fallacy—a most arrant fallacy.

This circulation does hurt the advertiser.

It hurts him and hurts hard, because he has to pay well for it. He pays just as much for it as for exhibitor circulation.

SOMEBODY has to pay for it—for circulation costs money—and it is always the advertiser who pays for circulation.

The larger the circulation the more he pays. That is all right; that is good value, provided it is the circulation he can sell his goods to.

BUT with newsstand circulation, how is he to know? Nobody knows, and nobody ever will know, the publisher included.

So the advertiser buys blindly, and pays the publisher's loss on every single copy that is bought by the public, or by any one who isn't a purchaser for the pictures and equipment used in a motion picture theatre.

A MOTION picture journal carrying almost entirely trade advertising has no business on the newsstands.

It is as absurd for it to be there as for a boot and shoe journal, or a drug journal, or a grocery journal—all of which are devoted to their particular trade and are supported by trade advertising.

IF a picture journal has a popular circulation, it should only charge the advertiser the same rate that popular mediums charge, namely, not over a dollar a thousand readers.

Then it will "help a little" and won't hurt greatly, although, so far as results are concerned, for the advertiser, it is like hunting whales with bird-shot.

THERE is but one way for the advertiser to know he is getting trade circulation—purchasing circulation—at the necessarily high trade journal rates, and that is, to BUY SUBSCRIPTION CIRCULATION.

LOS ANGELES LEAGUE SEEKS FUSION

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Los Angeles, Sept. 7.

AT the regular monthly meeting of the Exhibitors' League, held at Los Angeles, at the Mozart Theatre building, steps were taken to campaign for a larger membership. Following the reading of letters advising that the charter affiliating the organization with the national one read by Secretary Hale, would be forwarded in the near future.

The question of affiliating with the other organizations in California was brought before the meeting. Following a discussion in which all members present took a very active part, a vote showed a majority favored having but one organization in California. Steps will be taken for affiliation with other exhibitors' organizations of this state that are affiliated with the national one. The matter of appointing a committee to take charge of boosting the membership of the league was placed in the hands of Judge A. P. Tugwell, the president of the organization.

CENSOR ACTIVE AGAIN IN DALLAS

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Dallas, Sept. 8.

Mrs. Reed Finley, amusement censor of Dallas, has again placed the ban on "The House of Bondage." An effort was made here several months ago to show this picture and at that time Mrs. Finley said no. When it became known that a local exchange had again made an effort to get a showing in Dallas, Police Commissioner Blaylock was called to the aid of Mrs. Finley and informed the film men that an exhibition of the picture would not be permitted.

Manager Finnegan of the Hippodrome has not as yet filed a mandamus or injunction proceedings against the censor board to test their authority in regard to prohibiting certain pictures. Such a step was threatened several weeks ago when the board refused a permit.

SUCCESS FOLLOWS RISE OF PRICES

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Louisville, Sept. 9.

The Walnut Theatre, one of the largest motion picture houses in Louisville, has just entered into a contract with the World Film Corporation to show exclusively in this city the plays of the Shubert-Brady-Blaney combine.

The Walnut has heretofore been conducted as a five-cent house but will increase its admission price to ten cents for these photoplays. On the first day at which the increased price went into effect, more than 3,600 admissions were sold and it is claimed to have been the largest attendance for a single day during the season.

Congress May Force Films to Aid War Tax

General Levy on Amusements, Taxing Tickets, Now Considered in Answer to President's Appeal for $100,000,000.

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 10.

THE motion picture has again become a source of discussion for profit in the halls of Congress, this time for the war tax, along with other commodities, means of transportation, amusements, etc., suggested by members of the Ways and Means Committee. This is in response to the appeal of President Wilson for the raising of a war revenue of $100,000,000.

Several members of the committee reminded their associates of the enormous profits made on the motion picture films, using the testimony taken in the tariff hearing as a proof for such statement.

One member became bold enough to assert that profits of 110 per cent. are realized. Perhaps the manufacturers may be able to enlighten these Congressmen on the subject.

There is also a suggestion to tax all amusements, either directly on tickets or indirectly on the proprietors, and if this be done, the motion picture would naturally come in for its share for such a tax.

As an industry that has made such wonderful strides during its comparatively short life, there is some question as to why the motion picture should be singled out among other profitable enterprises. Congress certainly is determined to have its fingers somehow in the "film game." National censorship is still hanging fire, though ardor in its behalf has greatly waned.

Just why this amusement should be censored by Congress without giving the same surveillance over stage productions, and publishing companies perhaps, is unanswered in the minds of many.

Theodore Franklin.

Arizona May Organize to Fight Taxation

State and County Taxes Are Both Too High, Say Exhibitors, but Lack of Organization Makes Protest Impossible

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Phoenix, Ariz., Sept. 8.

THERE is much satisfaction in the ranks of the picture men over the state caused by the state and county license, universally regarded as too high.

The county exacts a license here that is far in excess of what it should be. The picture men of the state are not organized and in consequence are compelled to grin and bear the tax burden without recourse to the most potent factor for righting the ill, publicity on the screen.

If the houses were organized, the evil could be eradicated with a bit of concerted effort. It is understood that an effort will be made this fall to have the exhibitors of the state band under one head to fight systematically any legislation aimed at their prosperity.

Arizona is a new state and the legislator who is elected thinks his duty to his constituents evolves the introduction of some law and he picks the thing he knows the least for the exercise of his prerogative.

A hot state wide campaign for prohibition is holding the public attention here just now and the "wets" and "drys" are both planning to use the movie screens for placing their sides of the argument before the people.

The "drys" have been trying to get "John Barleycorn" to send out over the state with a lecturer but there is some hitch in the program. No reason is assigned for it.

Is State Censor's O. K. Supreme in Cities?

Or Can Local Authorities Reject Film Passed by State Board?—Cutting of "The Lure" in Pittsburgh May Raise Court Issue

Pittsburgh, Sept. 10.

A BATTLE is soon to be fought in the local courts of Allegheny county on account of the prominence of the Civilian Aide to the Director of Public Safety in Pittsburgh.

Civilian Aide Arch Mackerell is one of the busiest men in the city when it comes to looking after the morals of the people here. Time was when it was said Mackerell paid less attention to morals and went in for politics with a vengeance and the result was that the vote was turned out. Now he is looking after morals and votes at the same time and the result of his work last week was to put a stop to the showing of "The Lure," at the Minerva Theatre.

The management of the theatre offered serious objections to having his show put out of commission and objected to the activity of the police in this respect. Then it was that Mackerell appeared on the scene and after watching the show through, made them cut a large amount of the film out, regardless of the fact that the State Board of Censorship had already passed on the films.

It is possible that the local manager of the World Specialty Film Company may take the matter into court.

CHAOS MARKS OHIO CENSORS' FIRST DAY

Vestal and His Associates Fail to Have Leaders Ready for Use with Films, and Refuse to Help Exchanges Out with a Substitute Plan—"Recall Reels," He Tells Mutual Manager—Repeal Looked For as Only Relief

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Cincinnati, O., Sept. 9.

OHIO censorship of motion pictures has fastened a firm grip about the motion picture interests of the state. The law, which provides for the censoring of all films to be shown within the limits of the Buckeye state by three persons sitting in Columbus, went into effect on Tuesday, September 1. On that day it was rumored about Cincinnati, secret emissaries of the board, of which Harry Vestal is the chairman, visited every picture house in the city as inspectors to see that no violation of the law took place.

Exchange men worked until long after midnight on Monday in frantic efforts to arrange their programs so that the exhibitors who were their patrons would be protected against any seeming violation of the law.

Their efforts, however, were unsuccessful, not by reason of any fault of theirs, but because of the slow-moving machinery of the State Board of Censors. This body has been censoring films for three months, or ever since the Supreme Court held that its right to pass upon the fitness or unfitness of films to be presented to the public in Ohio, was constitutional.

Yet exchange men found when the morning of September 1 dawned, they were unable to carry out the letter of the censorship law.

Fail to Furnish Leaders

This was because the captions, or leaders, which state that the film has been passed by the state board of censors, and which under the law must be furnished by the board at an expense of $1 per, to each film distributing company, had not been furnished in time.

Long distance telephone calls to Mr. Vestal from all of the local managers developed the fact that the "leaders" would probably not arrive in time for the exchange men to send them out with their day's films.

"What shall we do?" asked the exchange men. "Can the exhibitor show films that have been approved, without the leaders?"

Mr. Vestal informed the managers that this should not be done as it is a distinct violation of the law and would subject the exhibitor to a fine of from $50 to $250 or a sentence of a year in jail, or both.

C. C. Hite, manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, told Mr. Vestal that he had more than 100 reels in circulation through the state. These reels did not bear the approved caption.

"Recall the reels," ordered Vestal.

"Impossible," replied Hite.

Exchanges Find a Working Plan

Exhibitors in Cincinnati do not know now whether they will be subject to arrest within the next few days or not. Some of the exchanges have sent out accompanying their films, which have been approved, but for which leaders have not been received, the following notice:

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

"Do not project this feature before examining each reel.

"If the reel does not have a leader, approved by the Ohio Board of Censors on it, write a slide approved by the Ohio State Board of Censors.

"State reel number before and after projecting feature."

Exchange men say permission to project slides bearing the number of the approved reel, in the absence of the leaders, was given them by Harry Vestal, chairman of the censor board.

Mr. Vestal, however, in talking to Manager C. C. Hite, of the Mutual on August 31, declared that this scheme could not be carried out.

Censors' Force Too Small?

According to one Cincinnati exchange man, the censor board is unable to get out the leaders in time because only one machine is used in reviewing the film and only one woman is being employed to draw up the certificates for the furnishing of the leaders.

Another feature of the case lies in the fact that Mayor Baker, of Cleveland, at the last moment bobbed up with the demand that he also be allowed to censor films shown in his city.

The censors promptly squelched Mr. Baker, it is understood here.

No such demand was made by Mayor Spiegel, of Cincinnati, who has ever stood ready to conserve the motion picture interests. It is understood, however, that Mayor Spiegel and the police department would suppress any objectionable film, even if it bore the approval of the censor board.

The city administration in Cincinnati, while lenient, has always and will always exert a quiet censorship on pictures and theatres in this regard. Complaints have also been received by local exchange men that so much of the film or approved reels have been cut out by the censors that the story has been robbed of its punch to a great extent. Scenes which have been reproduced in posters have been entirely cut away and complaints from theatre patrons in this regard have been heard.

Exhibitors Hope for Repeal

The hope of the Cincinnati exhibitors is for the repeal of the censorship law.

As the result of this chaotic state of affairs exhibitors in Cincinnati since the first of the month have been showing films furnished them by their exchanges, whether they carried the state leader or not. They are depending absolutely on the exchange men although if a law violation is found, the exhibitor will have to stand the prosecution.

The leader furnished by the State Board of Censors is five feet in length and must remain this length according to the rule. Every time a strip or two is torn off in a machine the leader must be duplicated, for which an additional charge of $1 is made by the censors.

Thomas Corby, one of the big exhibitors in Cincinnati, stated that he did not think the state censors would be able to do the work which they are required to do by law.

"Censors Can't Do the Work"

"If they try to censor every film produced, the work would keep 18 men busy for 24 hours every day," he declared. "It seems ridiculous that three persons should try to accomplish this task.

"Every motion picture man knows that it can't be done. They must, of course, pass many pictures by their titles, without having first seen the film, in order to get through. They must also cut out many pictures by their titles.

"In that case a film might be refused, returned to the exchange and fitted out with a new and better-sounding title, sent back to Columbus and passed.

"If such a thing were done and proved it would show that state censorship, under conditions such as we have in Ohio, is a farce."

Wisconsin Exhibitors Urged to Fight Adverse Bills

C. H. Phillips in Letter to Milwaukee Managers Says Strong Organization Should Be Formed to Combat Unfair Legislation

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Milwaukee, Sept. 9.

AN urgent call was made to Wisconsin exhibitors by C. H. Phillips on September 6 to get together and fight unfair legislation in that state. Mr. Phillips called attention to bills relating to state regulation, building code affecting motion picture theatres, censorship and certain arbitrary powers it is proposed to give the fire marshal in making inspections of buildings. These bills were being prepared by the reference librarian at Madison.

With the possible exception of censorship the exhibitors in the city of Milwaukee would not be affected, but Mr. Phillips declared that a strong front should be presented by every exhibitor in the state against the proposed legislation.

In letters sent out to the managers of motion picture theatres in the city it was proposed to hold a convention on September 15 at the Plankington House club rooms.

All exhibitors were ured to become members.

The letter follows:

Milwaukee, Wis., Sept. 6.

Dear Exhibitor: You no doubt know that the International Motion Picture Association and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America effected an amalgamation of the two organizations at the convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America held at Dayton, Ohio.

The undersigned, who is the president of the International Motion Picture Association, has been appointed on the Executive Board of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, and as such member respectfully calls your attention to the necessity of forming a strong organization in the State of Wisconsin for the purpose of preparing to fight proposed legislation which will be introduced in our next Legislature.

We have been informed that the bills which will be introduced are already being drawn by the reference librarian at Madison. The bills with which we are likely to be confronted are those relating to state license, state building code, censorship and last, but not least, a law empowering the fire marshal to inspect theatres.

Milwaukee would not be affected by any of these bills, with a possible exception of the censorship bill, which may increase the cost of service.

The Motion Picture Association of Milwaukee feels it is its duty to fellow exhibitors to prevent any legislation adverse to the interests of the moving picture industry in the State of Wisconsin, and to that end invites a solid organization that can go before the Legislature and present its claims.

We have therefore decided to hold a convention at the city of Milwaukee on Tuesday, September 15, beginning at 9 o'clock in the morning, the meeting to be called at the Plankington House club rooms; this is State Fair week and you should find an opportunity to attend both the convention and the State Fair. Arrangements have been made to entertain all of the exhibitors at a luncheon at 1 o'clock, p. m.

If it is impossible for you to attend the convention and assist us in electing competent and efficient officers to represent the Wisconsin exhibitors, we respectfully ask you to show that you are a live exhibitor and not one who depends upon others to protect his interests, by sending to Mr. George Fischer, temporary treasurer, in care of the Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, the sum of six dollars, which includes your initiation fee and dues for one year.

This amounts to but fifty cents per month, with which you will protect your interests against unfair legislation in the State of Wisconsin.

Respectfully yours,

C. H. Phillips,

President International Motion Picture Association.

Reaction in Capital Against War Films

Disturbances They Cause in the Audience More Than Offset Their Popularity, Say Exhibitors—Wilson's Neutrality Appeal a Factor

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 10.

THERE is much sentiment here at present against the exhibition of the war films. They were loudly heralded in some theatres and anxiously waited by the public, just as the newspapers are for the latest news of the fearful combat in Europe. The films have come and have been making the rounds of the city, at first with much demonstration, but now that has calmed and in fact, to a part of the public, they have lost their flavor.

President Wilson's appeal to the people to regard and respect the strict neutrality of America in all things, including the motion pictures exhibited of war preparations has had much to do with the present aspect of matters. His wishes have been considered.

Like every other large city of this country, the population of Washington is made up of many nationalities and there will of necessity be in a motion picture house representatives of the nations now fighting. There is no good reason to give these people excitement and antagonistic feeling, perhaps, against the occupant of the seat next to him.

One exhibitor remarked that while the showing of the mobilization of the various European armies were money getters for him with standing room only most of the time, the next set of war films would be to his loss.

"They caused too much disturbance in my house. There were demonstrations of sympathy in different quarters as the different troops entered the screen. The usual silence of the screen exhibitions was utterly disregarded and one might almost have imagined it was a baseball game.

"No, I can't afford that. It would spoil my house. No more war films for me."

While there is a feeling against the real war views of the present conflict in Europe, there is a warlike spirit in the public and anything flavoring of national conflicts, imaginary or with some authentic value, are being put upon the screens and eagerly patronized by the public.

It almost appears that every war photoplay that has been issued for the past two years is being given a return engagement with financial benefit to the management. Theodore Franklin.

Milwaukee Censors Snub Reformers

Despite Protests, Exhibitors Are Merely Asked to Cut the Titles to a Flash in "For Those Unborn"—Coming Season One of Unbounded Prosperity, Is the Outlook—Three New Downtown Theatres Are Under Way

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Milwaukee, Wis., Sept. 9.

JUST what a fair-minded, conscientious censor board has to contend with and to what extremes certain "reformers" of the "holier than thou" type will go was never better illustrated than in this city today when one of this type complained to the local Citizens' Committee of the title of a picture that was being shown at the Butterfly Theatre.

The picture in question being the Majestic's "For Those Unborn," with Blanche Sweet in the lead.

Though Charles Phillips, the secretary of the Citizens' Committee, refused to divulge the name of the complainant, he said that the only objection that could have been made against the picture was the title, as the picture itself was absolutely beyond reproach.

The Citizens' Committee took no other action on the picture than to ask Manager Graham to cut the titles to a flash.

That the party or parties who objected to the title of "For Those Unborn" were able to countenance a musical comedy that played this city the last half of last week, in which the chorus displayed considerable of its physical beauty, is beyond the understanding of the local exhibitors.

Not the First Time

This is not the first time that the Citizens' Committee have had trouble with reformers of this type. Not long ago a certain well-known business man caused some of the members of the committee to spend two hours of their time viewing a picture at which he had held up his hands in holy horror and which turned out to be an absolutely harmless production.

In this case, the Citizens' Committee reprimanded the complainant instead of the exhibitor.

The present season from all appearances is going to be the most prosperous for local motion picture exhibitors in many years. The downtown theatres are playing to practical capacity all week, and though plans are completed for two new houses, a third is now building and a fourth contemplated, none of the down town men are worrying.

In fact, the majority welcome the newcomers and expect an increase in business rather than a decrease when the new houses are opened.

"For," said one of the managers, "the more bright lights there are, the bigger the crowds, and the bigger the crowds, the bigger the business."

The Strand, which is now building, is expected to open about October 15. Phillip Gross, Jr., will be the manager of the new house, and he promises that he will have many surprises in the way of conveniences and innovations for local picture fans. The house is about a block out of the present bright light district, and its opening is sure to open a new downtown field for local exhibitors.

New Downtown Theatres

It is expected that ground will be broken for the "White House," O. L. Meister's new $100,000 house, before the snow flies. This, together with a new house, which is to be built on the southeast corner of Third and Wells streets, completes the list of new downtown theatres announced.

The outskirt theatres all look for a prosperous season. Many of them are gradually sliding their price from five to ten cents, and it is expected that ere the winter is over the ten-cent admission fee will prevail at the majority of the outskirt houses instead of at the minority, as is now the case.

In the face of much competition, Manager George Fischer of the Alhambra Theatre, in place of adopting a cut-throat policy, has bravely decided to increase his admission fee to twenty cents for the downstairs seats in the evening. The balcony seats will remain at ten cents as heretofore, and no advance will be made in the matinee prices.

Six and seven reels will be given, and the magnificent fourteen-piece orchestra will be retained. Entertainers have always been very popular at the Alhambra and Manager Fischer is combing the vaudeville and opera stages for talent.

The Paramount program will be shown, together with the General Film companies' features, and the pick of the General's regular program. This, together with any special features that may be booked in from time to time, will make the Alhambra's program the peer of any in the city.

The majority of motion picture men concede that the new policy will be a success, and it would not be surprising to see a house erected here very shortly to house twenty-five-cent pictures.

Fatal Lack of Co-Operation

A splendid example of what lack of co-operation among motion picture exhibitors will do to the manager's pocketbook was seen at Portage, Wis., some weeks ago. A tent show came to town and put up their tent on the market square about half a block above two of the town's picture houses and about three blocks from the third.

Here they stayed all week, pirating shows and charging twenty and thirty cents for inferior productions. Though they paid but little into the coffers of the town, they took out between $100 and $150 a night.

In the meanwhile the three motion picture exhibitors, who were all paying taxes, and residents of the town saw the band from the show come down in front of two of the theatres and, after a short concert and some ballyhooing, drag the crowd past the motion picture houses and into the tent show. This went on all week and the exhibitors were helpless.

In fact, the weekly band concert was cut short for the convenience of the tent show, a consideration that the picture exhibitors have never even asked for.

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG GOES TO PEERLESS

Clara Kimball Young, who was featured by the Vitagraph Company in "My Official Wife," has left that company to become the star of the recently formed Peerless Studio, which is one of the component parts of the World Film Corporation.

With Mrs. Young comes her husband, James Young, who is also her director. They have been associated with the Vitagraph Company for four years and in that time they have staged such winners as "The Little Minister," "Love's Sunset," "Goodness Gracious" and "Violin of M'siou." All of which, with the exception of the first named, have been shown at the Vitagraph Theatre.

The first release that Clara Kimball Young will be seen in under the Peerless company is to be "Lola," which is from a story written by Owen Davis. It will be released in October.

GOEBEL GETS NOMINATION

Pittsburgh, Sept. 10.

John Goebel, of the North End Theater, Perrysville avenue, North Side, has been nominated as the only candidate for president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association to succeed Fred J. Herrington, resigned. The election takes place this week.

PENNSYLVANIA CENSOR BANS BIG POSTERS

Makes Ruling Forbidding the Use of Anything Larger Than a Three Sheet, Measuring 43 by 83—Breitinger, of "John Barleycorn" Memory, May Be Overstepping His Authority in Issuing This Arbitrary Order

Philadelphia, Sept. 10.

PARAGRAPH No. 21 of the new rules issued (or about to be issued) by J. Louis Breitinger, chief motion picture censor of Pennsylvania, deals expressly with the use of big paper. Not stopping at barring the use of big paper in front of theatres he has made his ruling so general that it includes all places of amusement. Under this head come theatres, parks, circuses, etc., over which he is not supposed to have any control.

The specific ruling reads: "All banners, posters, handbills or other advertising matter on display at places of amusement or elsewhere of a large size or of a lurid, sensational or misleading character are prohibited, and the board will appreciate the co-operation of the manufacturing companies, film companies and the exhibitors in its endeavor to properly regulate the display of films, reels or views to be exhibited and the advertising in connection therewith."

This copy of the regulations was posted in the ante-room of the censors' Philadelphia projection room. A pen and ink note change the words "large size" to read, "of a larger size than a three-sheet poster, 43 x 83."

This is all very good as far as it goes and the growing tendency to do away with the large size monstrosities which are put out in the form of six, eight, nine, twelve, sixteen and twenty-four-sheet stands, will back Mr. Breitinger up in his duling.

The really up-to-date exhibitor has no place for the big paper if his lobby is well regulated. He does not need and moreover does not want anything larger than a three to properly display his wares. But where he is putting on a big production and wants to bill the show like a legitimate theatrical attraction would be billed, where would his paper showing be with threes only?

He also errs in his ruling on "places of amusement." He is only supposed to be a picture censor and as such his authority is clearly defined in the law which created the censor board. He is treading on the toes of the legitimate theatre owners and there is liable to be a flareback of large proportions.

Other rulings of importance are also made. One which will affect the manufacturer or renter is, "The fee of $2.50 will be charged for each reel of 1,200 feet or less and $2.50 for each duplicate or print of each film, reel or view."

In the past and under a working agreement with the companies which had entered suit only the original was charged for. Now everything is included, originals and duplicates.

This is followed later by a ruling that "On and after September 18, 1914, all films irrespective of release date shall be submitted to the board in accordance with the rules."

This means that those who have been only submitting pictures released since June 1, 1914, will have to shell out good money for films that have mainly passed beyond the field of usefulness except for occasional booking.

Applicants to have reels censored must furnish the name of the manufacturer and of the players (except in the case of current events) and an affidavit as to the number of duplicates, and in addition a letter describing the scenes and purposes intended to be carried out or lesson (moral or otherwise) to be conveyed by such film.

If an elimination or rejection of any film is recommended the applicant is to receive immediate notice of rejection or elimination, and if not agreed to the film will be reviewed by the censor himself and the applicant or his representative. This would seem that the case of the "Barleycorn" film had sunk in deep.

It will be remembered that after Carl Pierce, of Bosworth, Inc., made a kick and a fight, the censor decided that he would reconsider.

All banners, posters, handbills or other advertising matter concerning films, reels or views, where same are lurid, sensational or misleading, will be prohibited and when requested by the board such advertising matter used in connection with the display of the film must accompany the film.

He then proceeds to take a crack at vice and problem films, since his recent encounter with a Harrisburg exhibitor who defied him by showing the "Drug Terror."

"All films released prior to June 1, 1914 (excepting those depicting sex and vice problems and films similar thereto and also excepting those in which complaint is made by the board) may be exhibited within the state until September 1, 1914."

Expressions of opinion could not be learned from exchange men and exhibitors, but it is known from expressions prior to the above rulings that on the poster question at least the censor will not have any kicks. Every big exchange in Philadelphia and most of the little ones were interviewed on the poster question when it was thought that the one sheet would be the largest allowed and the opinion was unanimous that it would be a good thing.

Aside from the artistic viewpoint they considered the financial viewpoint. Only one concern in the entire lot, the Interstate Films Company, claimed to be making any entries on the right side of the poster department ledger, but the manager agreed that the ruling if enforced would be a good thing for the business.

In spite of the apparent mistakes in the censor bulletin we trust for the sake of the business at large that the misleading poster is barred permanently.

Wheat Crop Booms Kansas Theatres

Many Houses Near Kansas City Remodeled—The Electric Inaugurates One Twenty-Cent Night a Week

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Kansas City, Mo., Sept. 9.

SEVERAL houses in the territory adjacent to this city are being remodeled or entirely rebuilt as a result of the impetus given picture exhibitions by the general prosperity of the huge wheat crop.

In Parsons, the Best Theatre, owned by Otto Fees, will be doubled in capacity to seat about 1,200 persons by the addition of two new store rooms. A new house is being built in Atchison by the Center Amusement Company, operating two houses in St. Joseph, Mo.

The new house there probably will be named the Orpheum and will be the third in that city. In addition Herbert Welch, owner of the Colonial Theatre in Atchison already has doubled the capacity of his house.

Another Kansas house, the Electric, operated by P. J. Concannon in Emporia, is being doubled. Entirely new equipment is being installed, including new seats and a $2,500 orchestral unit. Mr. Concannon plans to increase the price of admission at his house to twenty cents on one night a week. The regular admission now is five and ten cents. In the event the increase is made permanent, his house will be the first outside of the larger cities in this section to charge that sum. Emporia is a town of about 10,000 inhabitants.

CHICAGO THEATRE TRIES HIGHER PRICES

Star Bucks the Center of a Nickel District, and in Raising Its Admission to Ten Cents, Plays to Big Business—Also Successful in Keeping a Feature on for a Week—News of American and Essanay Companies on the Coast

Chicago, Sept. 10.

RIGHT in the heart of Chicago's most active business section, two hustling, ambitious and aggressive exhibitors, decided something like a month ago to install another motion picture theatre where there already seemed to be plenty.

These two gentlemen had gained success in their other theatre ventures, of which they now own nine, in their taking the initiative, and having the courage of their own convictions. Many of their other theatres stand out as strong as does the Star, but the Star is a shining example of what can be accomplished in the face of seemingly unsurmountable obstacles.

Madison street between Clark and Dearborn streets has been for many years known as Motion Picture Row because of the number of film theatres located in that one block. In its number are included some of the very first photoplay houses that were opened in Chicago. They have weathered all the storms, gone through all the changes, and of late a few of them have been showing more than three reels for five cents.

JOHN BODKIN and John Keane under the firm name of Bodkin-Keane Company, opened this Star Theatre and immediately did the unheard of thing. They established an admittance price of ten cents. Simultaneously with that radical move they put on a feature and played it for one entire week.

Only in very exceptional cases has it been known that one picture played on Madison street for that length of time. The other theatres still continue to charge five cents. They, of course, are getting the five cent pieces, but Bodkin and Keane are getting twice that much.

The theatre holds three hundred people, it is well ventilated, the air being changed every minute and a half; the decorations are soft and the pictures good. The advertising in front of the house is not of the circus variety. There is no loose flapping of posters.

A SPECIAL electric sign, built by Marx Brothers, covers the upper portion of the house. It is a pretty piece of workmanship. Underneath the sign, and a part of it, is a framework which will hold a nine sheet and several threes; this is bordered by electric light. Outside of this there are only a few other frames about the lobby. The only music used at the present time is a piano player and an orchestra.

"I believe," remarked Mr. Keane, "that when you have something exceptional, a real feature to offer people, you should raise your admittance price, otherwise you are putting the exceptional films on the same level as the ordinary and they will not receive the appreciation they should.

"We have established this ten cent admission price and intend to maintain it. It is easier for us to get good features because we do not make daily changes. Sometimes we play a film as long as a week, others we keep for three days."

This is the first time in the history of "The Row" that a policy of nothing but features has been established. To many it undoubtedly seemed impractical as it is a transient trade as a general rule that visit these theatres. Many have a half hour or an hour to spend and drop in to while away the time.

THE policy of Bodkin and Keene, however, seems to prove that the photoplay is established on a stronger basis on this street of transients than merely as a pastime. It is now recognized there as one of the necessary amusements.

The Picture Playhouse Film Company, Inc., of New York City, has established Chicago quarters in the Mallers building. S. C. Bestar is in charge of this branch. Mr. Bester has been associated with the film business for a number of years and is especially familiar with the central west territory.

Mr. Hubbell, of the firm of Moore Hubbell Company, is in Europe at the present time securing photographs for his firm which it is issuing in slide form to the picture playhouses. This gives this firm first-hand views of the subjects to be presented to the trade.

THE Majestic Theatre, of Rock Island, Ill., owned by Joseph Hopp, of Chicago, and managed by Joseph R. Quinn, opened during the past week after being closed during August for decorations and repairs.

Mr. Roth, owner of one of the large theatres in Joliet, is experiencing a little difficulty in the exhibiting of "The Littlest Rebel." It seems as though another exhibitor of the same city had booked it for the Fourth of July, but in view of the fact that it was not released at that time, that booking automatically expired.

No further effort was made by that gentleman to renew his bookings and now that Mr. Roth has billed it he threatened suit. Mr. Gollos, of the Photoplay Productions Releasing Company, has his personal lawyer looking out for the interests of Mr. Roth.

IN conjunction with the "Ladies' World Magazine" the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company will release the first complete mystery drama of a unique series. The first of these dramas is "The Plum Tree," in three acts.

"The Plum Tree," like all mystery dramas which will follow, will be a complete story with the exception that one paragraph will be omitted in the "Ladies' World." In the Essanay production the entire story will be shown on the screen, including the paragraph which is missing in the magazine story.

The "Ladies' World" will offer large prizes to its readers who send in the best paragraph to take the place of the one which is missing. In order to find out just what the missing paragraph is, it will be necessary for the magazine readers to see the photoplay.

THESE stories will not be released in serial form by the Essanay, but each production will be complete in one release of as many reels as is required. There will be a story a month and a release a month.

Harry Pollard is producing "The Legend of Black Rock." This photoplay is a story with unusual depth and Margarita Fischer has a role that will give her an opportunity to display her dramatic ability in a new light. Joe Harris is playing opposite.

Thomas Ricketts is producing the third of his series of stories by Marc Edmund Jones. It is called "In the Daylight." The previous of this series were "In the Firelight," and "In the Moonlight," which were highly spoken of by the critics, and "In the Daylight" promises to be equally well received.

A BEAUTY society comedy-drama featuring Margarita Fischer and Harry Pollard, will be released by the American Film Manufacturing Company, Tuesday, September 22.

In the Flying A production of "Jail Birds," William Garwood made a sensational dive through the window of the court house after he had been found guilty of manslaughter by the jury.

NETTIE NOGES.

In her second season with that company, Miss Noges was promoted to more important parts in such plays as Sudermann's "Magda," "Fires of St. John," and Strindberg's "Father." In the "Fires of St. John" Miss Noges scored her first great hit which resulted in her being chosen as the leading woman for the Theatre Eathonia, where she immediately starred in the "Pillars of Society."

RELEASE VIVID WAR PICTURE

The two-reel release of the U. B. O. Feature Picture Company, entitled "The Evolution of Europe," was secured by the foreign agent of the United Booking Office, F. P. Company, and is said to be authentic in every detail.

The action starts with the scenes of mobilization in England, Russia, Germany, Austria, France and Servia, with the crowned heads reviewing the armies. The fleets of super-dreadnaughts, cruisers and destroyers in battle array; the Uhlans in death grapple with the enemy; the Tsar's Cossacks in action—all are given in vivid scenes.

The picture has already won success at the New York Theatre, New York City, and the Bowdoin, Boston.

KATHIE FISCHER CELEBRATES BIRTHDAY

Kathie Fischer, niece of Margarita Fischer, has celebrated her seventh birthday. She was the recipient of many presents from her numerous admirers. Besides a number of children who attended the festivities were Margarita Fischer, Mrs. Fischer, Mrs. Pyle and Harry Pollard.

Ohio Censors and Temperance League Clash

Head of Association Fails to Prevent Cuts in "Ten Nights in a Bar-room"—Censor Law Now in Full Force

Columbus, O., Sept. 10.

ONCE more the Ohio Anti-Saloon League and the Ohio board of censors have clased. The first time it was over the films of Jack London's "John Barleycorn," in which the censors shortened several drinking scenes. This time it's over "Ten Nights in a Bar-room," another temperance picture.

Wayne B. Wheeler, head of the Ohio Anti-Saloon League, first declared he would bring mandamus proceedings against the board to restore certain scenes cut out of the picture. Later, however, he announced that a lecturer would be sent around by the league wherever the picture is shown to explain what scenes were cut.

Wheeler, in an interview in several local papers concerning the eliminations in the "Ten Nights in a Bar-room" pictures, recalled the allegation that $25,000 had been offered by the manufacturers of the "John Barleycorn" pictures to suppress the pictures in six states on which wet and dry elections are scheduled for this fall.

The state industrial commission demanded an explanation, claiming that Wheeler's statements sounded as if he meant to imply that the company had offered the censors a bribe. Wheeler replied that he meant to convey no such impression and sent the commission a copy of a photograph of a letter purporting to have been sent by an Illinois liquor organization to the owners of the film offering the $25,000 for the suppression of the film in Ohio and other states.

The censors stand pat on their cuts of drinking scenes.

"We cut such scenes always and can make no exception in these pictures," they say. "Enough of the scenes are left to convey the idea, to tell the story and to impress the temperance lesson the pictures tell."

The state film law went into full effect Tuesday, September 1. From now on any Ohio exhibitor showing films not approved by the Ohio board of censors will be liable to prosecution under the law. The penalty is a fine of not less than $25 or more than $300 for the first offenses and imprisonment for not less than 30 days or more than one year or both for persistent violations.

There will be little if any crime, fewer drinking scenes, and even less kissing in the pictures from now on.

Cleveland Musical Union Demands Increase

Exhibitors Declare that They See in the Move a Well-Laid Plan to Abolish Mechanical Devices

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Cleveland, Sept. 9.

THE blood-sweating behemoth of circus poster fame—the only and largest living animal of its species in captivity, gentlemen—has nothing on the Cleveland motion picture exhibitors at the present time.

Even before arbitration on the operator's wage scale had been successfully closed the exhibitors had a demand of more than a two hundred per cent. increase from the Musicians' Union to contend with. The elements of a splendid fight are in the making. The Musical Mutual Protective Association, Local No. 4, American Federation of Musicians, in a letter to the local managers demand a new scale of wages for all musicians.

But the new rates hit particularly operators of mechanical devices, and the theatre owners see in the demand a carefully-planned move to abolish mechanically-operated musical devices. Here is the scale demanded: Where a man now plays six nights a week for a three-hour period, he receives $16 a week. The new figure asked is $24. This applies to all non-mechanical instruments.

A man playing a mechanical device in the uptown theatres (east of East Ninth street) for a four-hour period, six nights a week, now receives $20. The union demands $50 for the same working hours.

In the downtown houses where three shows are given daily for seven days, the mechanical player operator receives on an average $35 a week. He works about 10 hours per day. And now $80 for seven days, or $65 for six days is demanded.

For downtown non-mechanical players, $4 per single engagement of four hours is asked. If the man works in two shifts, being employed seven hours, $6 is demanded.

The exhibitors have balked at the demand and declare that if the issue is forced the entire city will swing to non-union men. They anticipate that the union will call out the union picture-machine operators if the demand for the higher rates is not acceded to. In such a case they promise to bring in and employ only non-union operators.

The exhibitors will meet to talk over the situation. They declare that the wages demanded are ruinous to the exhibitor and cannot be met.

The Fable of the "Dog" Town That Knew What It Wanted

By A. H. Giebler

And incidentally, of the man who was wise enough to give the "stop-on-signal" community the line of amusement stuff it was standing pat to get—Moral: The wise guy of the metropolis who kicks because the "R.F.D's" won't fall for "1820-and-still-going" junk is the boob of the business

THERE is a town about 50 miles south of St. Louis that I cannot call by its real name without wounding the feelings of some very good people in a manner that the reader of this story would not understand unless he had lived in the town, but since every word of this story is true, I will call the place Verity, which will make it near enough to the truth for all concerned.

Verity is a small town, and as near like several other thousand towns that fly-speck the map of the United States as are the proverbial peas in the pod. Its streets are muddy all winter and dusty all summer, and outside of the circle of its three thousand inhabitants and their sons and daughters and other kinsfolk who have gone away to live in other places, it is little known.

Verity used to have a reputation, however, a reputation that reached far and wide, and caused it to be talked of in railroad trains and on railroad ties, in hotel lobbies and hall bedrooms all over the country, and the people who talked about the town did not give it its real name any more than I have. They called it "Anathema," and "that awful burg," and "Punkville," and a dozen other ugly and, to their reasoning, appropriate names.

VERITY had the reputation of being the worst show town on the kerosene circuit! Verity compels me to tell the truth about "Verity." It was the worst show town on the kerosene circuit, and while Verity justified its reputation, it was perfectly justified in it. Its character was won not because the people were slow or behind the times, or because they were afflicted with a moral wave, but because there was a lot of people in the theatrical business without brains enough to give the people in country towns the credit of having any brains at all.

Verity is just near enough to St. Louis to be used as a try-it-on-the-dog stop for every fly-by-night bunch of hamfats and patent medicine Indian herb grafters on the road. About once or twice a month during the season some broken down thespian would send out a call for lady and gent performers who could furnish their own wardrobe, were willing to work for a small salary and double in brass. Lord knows, they had brass enough.

A fearful and wonderful aggregation of almost talent would be got together that could usually pool enough funds to buy a ten-trip to Verity, which was chosen because it was a small, inoffensive town on the way south where overcoats were not needed. At first, quite a few of these near actors did make enough to carry them to the next stop, not because Verity liked the sort of performance they gave, but because the people were amusement hungry, and kept on hoping against hope that perhaps some time through a lucky accident a good show would come to town, but that sort of lightning struck the place so seldom, and as there was no way to pick out the sheep from the goats without spending their money, they stopped going altogether.

IT finally got so that every show, good or bad, that came to the Opera House, played to old Pete Woolson, the janitor, and a few ushers. The good companies that had accidentally billed the town soon cut it off their route, and the bad ones disbanded, the men walked out of town, and the women got jobs waiting on the table in Aaron Wheatley's Palace Hotel until they could get in touch with, and negotiate a touch from some good-natured relative who would send them enough to pay their way back to the city.

From that time on the fine big Opera House was dark except when the Methodist Church played an engagement with a church fair, or when the Ideal Dancing Club gave a blow-out.

Three years elapsed. Motion pictures were born. The people of Verity took new hope. Visitors to the city brought back glowing accounts of the new art. The people looked forward to the time when they would have their own moving picture shows. The time came. They got them. They got them from the same source that they had got their speaking stage shows. The tribe of hamfats was not dead.

They came to the town and established store shows, and used the same line of reasoning they had used in their dramatic ventures. "Anything is good enough for the sticks." They ran year-old, rain-stormy pictures in badly lighted, poorly ventilated rooms.

THE people, long suffering and patient, came. They took a look at the miserable projection, and listened to the raucous voiced bawler, whom the manager felt it was his duty to station at the side of the screen to explain the picture to the "rubes." The "rubes" came once or twice, then they stayed at home, and the town's reputation grew worse. It was hopeless, the hamfats said; they gave it up; it was the worst picture town on the map.

Then Jimmie Maxwell arrived on the scene, and the town lost its reputation. He did not have to come far, because he was born and raised in the town. Jimmie liked to go to shows, and although he was what the hamfat managers would have called a "rube," he had seen more high class performances in his young life than most of them had, on either the silent or speaking stage, and he knew good work when he saw it.

It was summer when Jimmie got his hunch. He proposed building an airdome. All the older citizens advised him against his project. "It won't do, Jimmie," his uncle John, president of the National Bank, told him. "The people have been humbugged so often they won't go to your show."

"Yes, but, Uncle John, I intend to give them good pictures."

"You can't give them good pictures, Jimmie. The exchanges in the city won't ship you good ones. They say anything is good enough for us rubes. They will send you pictures that will be old and out of date, and pictures that will get the church crowd against you."

"I WON'T have the old stuff," said Jimmie. "I know good pictures when I see 'em. I'll go up there to the exchanges and I'll shake a bunch of money in their faces, and I'll get good pictures, the kind I want, or I won't have any."

"All right, Jimmie," said Uncle John. "Go ahead; your name's good for the cash at my bank; only remember you will have to give the people of this town a first class show in a first rate building. They are used to doing without shows,

RAILROAD MOTION PICTURE CAR READY

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Springfield, Ill., Sept. 10.

Within the next few weeks residents of the smaller Illinois towns will have motion pictures brought to them in the first railroad motion picture theatre ever put out in the United States.

The Jones Brothers Railroad Moving Picture Shows company have just about completed their first motion picture car and it will be started on its initial tour shortly. The car is to be pure white. It will be called the "White Dove."

Electricity generated on the car will provide current for the projection machine, the elaborate outside electric light display and the $1,000 electrical orchestra which will be installed in the car. The interior of the car is arranged to seat a large number of persons. First-class films will be shown, particularly feature pictures of high merit.

NEW PROVIDENCE THEATRE OPENS JAN. 1.

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Providence, Sept. 9

THE National Realty Corporation has acquired by long leases the entire block bounded by Union, Washington, Worcester and Clement streets, where it is proposed to construct a modern business block having a three-story frontage on Washington street.

It will contain a theatre 119 feet by 200 feet on the ground floor, which will have a seating capacity of 3,000. It will be used as a motion-picture house, but the stage and accessories will be sufficient to permit the putting on of regular dramatic productions.

Mr. Williams, the proprietor of the Casino, has the lease of the theatre and expects to open about January 1, 1915.

BOSWORTH ACTOR SURPRISES POLICEMAN

Some of the scenes in Jack London's "An Odyssey of the North," made by Bosworth, Inc., are laid in Seattle, so Hobart Bosworth, who directed it and played the lead, went there to take them, thereby giving a Seattle policeman the surprise of his life.

Noticing an Eskimo whose actions were attracting a crowd that blocked traffic, he seized the disturber and hustled him away. The man went willingly, only to paralyze the policeman a moment later by saying, "Thank you so much. Would you mind doing that again?" The officer was game, and his scene with Hobart Bosworth as "Naass" forms one of the most effective in a production full of dramatic moments.

Cleveland Mayor Threatens Local Censorship

Starts War on Lurid Advertising, and Scenes of Crime and Violence—Will Arrest Any Showing of Uncensored Films

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Cleveland, O., Sept. 9.

POLICE censorship of motion picture films may again be established in Cleveland if Director of Law J. N. Stockwell holds that the city has this power since the enactment of the State censorship law.

Following the complaint that motion picture scenes of crime and violence were being shown at a number of downtown theatres, Mayor Baker has requested the law department for a ruling as to the city's powers since the State Board of Censors has been passing upon films.

On Wednesday, September 2, Mayor Baker told Police Chief Rowe to order patrolmen to watch motion picture theatres on their beats and tear down and destroy banners and posters portraying crime or war scenes. According to the Mayor, the war against hair-raising banners will be continued until an injunction is sought by theatre owners and the case is threshed out in court.

Mayor Baker has also ordered the chief to detail men to see that only films bearing the approval of the Ohio State Board of Censorship are shown. Managers showing uncensored films are to be arrested, the Mayor said.

Huge lithographs of armed bandits and advertisements of other thrilling motion picture scenes have been displayed at a number of theatres within the past two weeks, the Mayor was told. The same conditions prevail in theatres in the outlying districts.

Following the city's crusade against pictures of crime two years ago, the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League voted against lurid advertising and the banners and lithographs at the theater entrance were eliminated.

Up until the time of the enactment of the State censorship law, police had the power to prevent the showing of crime and violence. A number of arrests were made in the crusade two years ago.

Attorney Robb O. Bartholomew was appointed city censor and he made a lengthy report on the motion picture situation, recommending the licensing of all theatres.

An ordinance incorporating Bartholomew's recommendations was introduced in the city council but failed to pass. City censorship was continued until the State Board of Censors took over the work.

Mayor Baker has asked the law department to report whether the censorship law repealed sections of the general code empowering police to prevent the showing of scenes of crime and violence. He does not expect a reply for some days. Orsen N. Nielsen.

Static Club Moves Into Permanent Quarters

Composed of Los Angeles Camera Men, Who Have Installed an Experimental Laboratory—All Local Manufacturers Represented

Los Angeles, Sept. 7.

THE Static Club, composed of about seventy camera men who have made good at local studios, is now cozily located in an attractive clubhouse near Echo Park Lake, at 1830 Santa Cruz street, which is to be made the permanent home of the organization.

At a recent meeting of the members, it was voted that the secretary should open negotiations with the Cinema Club of New York City, looking to the affiliation of members of that organization with the Static Club while at Los Angeles, or members of the Static Club with the Cinema Club while in the East.

A feature now being added to the clubhouse is an experimental laboratory where members can do developing and finishing, or secure the aid of other members in solving problems in motion picture photography.

The club is a corporation with eleven directors. The officers are: E. G. Ullman, president; William C. Foster, vice-president; Henry Gant, secretary; S. S. Norton, treasurer. All local manufacturing companies are being added at practically every meeting.

The Static Club held open house Saturday evening, August 29, to all camera men in Southern California. Invitations were sent to all camera men not members, and the attendance was greater than expected, there being about fifty present. During the evening the crank-turners and focus finders talked shop. There were explanations made of several different kinds of intricate exposure work, and a general social time followed. In the billiard room there were several match games, a musical program was given, and later lunch was served. The housewarming was a complete success.

All of the many studios in the Los Angeles motion picture industry were represented and there were a number of out of town camera men, including Thomas B. Middleton, H. B. Heimerl, F. M. Dean, and Mr. Brown, of the American studio at Santa Barbara, present. J. C. Jessen.

Community Theatres Strong in Capital

Northeast and Southeast Sections of Washington Reveal Neighborhood Houses, Both Airdomes and Theatres, in a Flourishing Condition—Apollo, Empire, Princess, Maycroft, Universal Park, Avenue Grand, Meader's and Navy, All Boast Consistent and Profitable Patronage

Washington, D. C., Sept. 10.

THE picture theatre in the residential parts of the Capital City is showing a marked improvement in many ways. This is exemplified in the northeast section, which, not so long ago, was characterized chiefly by the small house, mediocre music and a program which had chiefly seen the rounds of the other parts of the city. Not so now.

The northeast has become a progressive business community and with this advancement the motion picture exhibitor has also advanced.

New large theatres have been built carrying ten cent shows, first runs and big features as the daily shows, while excellent music accompanies the pictures, and attractive decorations and brilliant electric display are readily observed.

The Apollo Theatre is one of the newer houses with a capacity of about 700, under the able management of A. N. Waters. This has an artistic architecture, with an arched front and a lobby of considerable depth which adds to the attractiveness of the entrance.

The price of admission varies from 5 to 10 cents, according to the program, and a "Country Store" is a feature once or twice a week. Mr. Waters and his assistant, Mr. Chick, had only the most cheerful reports to make.

Music A Feature at the Empire

Another new theatre in this section is the Empire, which is large, commodious, and attractive in its structure and decorations. "Standing room only" regularly prevails at this house between the hours of 8 and 9:30, which bespeaks its popularity. Samuel Greenburg is the gracious manager, who is always solicitous of his patrons.

A noticeable feature of the Empire is its excellent music, which is always in keeping with the drama in progress. This is accounted for by the fact that Mr. Greenburg is a musician himself and will not tolerate mediocre music.

"I must have good music, no matter what the price," he said emphatically, as we listened to parts of the opera of "Madame Butterfly," "Il Trovatore," and selections from Beethoven accompanying a big feature.

The Princess is a very popular theatre in the northeast, which has enjoyed years of good patronage under the management of John Morgan. It has always stood for the best in the pictures, excellent ventilation, appropriate music and courteous treatment.

Mr. Morgan has been in the motion picture business a long time and has the ability of selecting a well balanced program which pleases everyone.

Special Provisions For Children

The Maycroft offers the residents of the northeast an excellent airdome, spacious, comfortable, and well managed by Fred Stein. The projection is good and the show consists of a feature and a couple of single reels, which includes a comedy.

This park is especially attractive for mothers with babies in carriages, for Mr. Stein has provided ample space for these and if the infants are asleep in the carriages the ushers are instructed to let the parent know if the child wakes. There is always an attendant to look after these babies.

"It is very seldom," said Mr. Stein, "that we have to call the mother for any disturbance on the part of these babies, for usually the child is at once attracted by the screen and enjoys the pictures or someone near at hand at once entertains the kid.

"It pleases me to note the confidence with which mothers turn over their little ones to our care. This gives them a chance to have a pleasure and relaxation after the day's work and trials."

Another park in this section is Universal Park, which is large and commodious. A good program is offered which is always well attended. This is under the management of William Minnis, who offers a special weekly attraction in the "Country Store."

Popular Southeast End Houses

The southeast section has been just as active in motion picture advancement as the northeast. The largest theatre in this part is the Avenue Grand, which commands an attractive frontage on Pennsylvania avenue.

This has a capacity of about a thousand with a gallery, wide aisles, roomy seats, high ceiling and one of the clearest screens of the city. The projection is excellent with perhaps the longest throw in the city. The Avenue Grand was formerly a vaudeville house and after various vicissitudes has finally come under the present management as an exclusive picture house. It carries an excellent program of features, which brings the patronage of the cultured of the community. John Keenan is the manager.

Another popular theatre in this vicinity is Meader's, under the management of Harry F. Wolf. This is a house of good size which caters to the refining influences of the pictures. Its attractive interior and exterior decorations have given it the distinction of being one of the pretty residential theatres. Its well-balanced program draws a good attendance.

The Navy, close at hand, is just recovering from a slump in business, but in the hands of the present management, C. R. Brooks, this theatre promises to once again stand in the good favor it formerly held.

Residential Houses Are Growing

It is exceedingly gratifying to note the advancement of the residential theatre, for this especially signifies the perpetuation of the motion picture as an amusement of the people.

These theatres are keeping pace with the down-town shows and in that way have been able to entertain a large part of the public within the vicinity of their homes. It has been and is playing a large part in keeping the unity of the homes, as well as giving the tired housekeeper a convenient and wholesome pleasure. The large, well ventilated, attractive house, with good music and clean shows has worked a refining influence in various sections of the city. It is nothing uncommon to see automobiles lined up against the curb before these theatres while the young folks have given them the same dignity of dress as if they were attending a high-priced legitimate performance.

ALCAZAR CELEBRATES FIRST ANNIVERSARY

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Waterbury, Conn., Sept. 10.

The Alcazar Theatre in Naugatuck observed its first anniversary the week of August 31 in a most fitting manner. Manager George Rabbott spared neither labor nor expense in garnishing his house for the festive week. The exterior was strung with five hundred variegated incandescent lights, while chains of laurel added a wanting touch of nature. The interior was embellished in regal style.

Beginning at the lobby the chain of lights and laurel swept on down through the orchestra and along the side walls. Hydrangeas and giant palms occupied advantageous positions on the stage. The screen had a laurel frame, and opposite it on either side were huge American flags. Ferns also added to the general effect. The anniversary week was brought to a close with the showing of "Home, Sweet Home," the Mutual Company's masterpiece.

Theatre of War, This Actor's Next Stand

Guy Standing, Cast for "The Silver King," Is Made a Lieutenant in the English Navy, Famous Players Hear

GUY STANDING, who was cast for the stellar part in the film version of "The Silver King," which the Famous

GUY STANDING

Players intended bringing out this season but postponed indefinitely when Standing, an English subject, and a member of the Royal English naval reserves, was called to the colors, has received a lieutenant's commission in the British navy, carrying with it the command of H. M. S. Ytene.

In a message to Adolph Zukor, Mr. Standing writes:

"I have been tendered and accepted a lieutenant's commission, with command of this ship, the 'Ytene.' Hence, for the time being I am no longer an actor, but a member of the King's 'Navee,' a role as interesting as that of 'The Silver King'—which again reminds me of your kindness and tolerance in suspending so costly a production because of the necessity that called me to the greater theatre of war."

In another paragraph, Guy Standing predicted the great naval battle between the English and German vessels, the official reports of which were recently published in the newspapers:

"I am confident that we will meet the enemy in a great sea fight very soon, and am certain the English naval force will give a good accounting of itself. The prevailing spirit among our numbers is one of calmness and quiet preparation. Yet we can sense the imminence of impending events."

KEWPIES ON THE SCREEN

"Our Mutual Girl" has traveled considerably, and in all cases she visits interesting people for the theater-goers who have been following her unique adventures through the medium of the Mutual pictures.

"OUR MUTUAL GIRL" AND HER KEWPIES

In the search for further novelty, the producer hit upon the bright idea of having "Our Mutual Girl" go and see Rose O'Neill, the creator of those quaint people, the Kewpies.

ELIZABETH THEATRE OPENS AGAIN

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Elizabeth, N. J., Sept. 10.

Elizabeth has another motion picture house. The G. A. R. Theatre at 124 East Jersey street after being closed for nearly a year, has been reopened under the name of the Victoria Theatre.

Harry Rubenfeld, a local man, is the proprietor and manager, having leased the building from its owners, Judson Kilpatrick G. A. R. post. Rubenfeld is running only evening performances except on Saturdays when he gives matinees. His prices are five and ten. Programs are changed daily.

UNIVERSAL MOVES SCENARIO DEPARTMENT

The scenario staff of the Universal Company is being moved from its present headquarters at the executive offices at 1600 Broadway, to the Imp studio. The move was suggested by Julius Stern, manager of the Imp studio, in order that co-operation can be developed between the directors and the scenario department.

It is essential that these two departments work in unison. It also enables the scenario department to judge what is necessary in the way of photoplays for the various companies.

Holiday Sees Change of Bill at the Vitagraph

"Win(k)some Widow" and "413" Vie With Each Other for Audience's Favor —Both Plays Commendable and Well Acted

THE change of bill at the Vitagraph Theatre, New York, on Labor Day was a welcome one in at least one respect—that it substituted a sturdy and wholesome melodrama for the sultry atmosphere of "The Painted World," which had headlined the preceding bill.

"413" is a melodrama that is far from the madding crowd of melodramas, not because there is anything particularly up to the minute about the story, but because it is played by a company, each member of which has intelligence enough to avoid painting the characters as black as they might.

Such sensible handling of a story is unusual enough to make the oldest blood-and-thunder tale new. There is not a trace of raving, ranting, strutting or posing in the whole three reels. The actors behave so naturally that they do for the credibility of the story what the cleverest playwright could not do with his imagination. The romance of a wealthy clubman, who is a secret service man in his spare moments, with the daughter of a diamond smuggler is not a novel plot, but when one finds human beings in the parts instead of barnstormers, it is certainly fascinating.

Harry Northrup plays his part to the limit, without exceeding it. Morey, as the hero, is more carefully disguised as an ordinary man than any hero of the season. Anita Stewart is—well, Anita Stewart, which would be praise enough for many an actress. The rest of the company, including Julia Swayne Gordon, lend their characters real and convincing individuality.

"The Win(k)some Widow" is remarkable for the appearance of J. Stuart Blackton, the well-known Commodore, in the role of farceur, and Cissy Fitzgerald's successful solution of the problem of carrying on five flirtations and attending to a husband, all at the same time. It requires four reels, the fire department and all her presence of mind to do it, but she emerges in the arms of her husband, with five solitaires and a menagerie to the good. To say nothing of the applause of her audience.

The farce is a trifle heady in spots, but it is prefaced with a sentimental hors d'oeuvre, "The Unwritten Play" and followed by "413," which is strong enough to carry off any of the intoxicating effects of its predecessor, like a cup of black coffee. The whole program is well compounded and ought to make a palatable mixture.

The Other Side of the Pass Question

By An Editor

Pass Seekers Posing as Newspaper Men Should Not Be Confused with Earnest, Hard Working Members of the Craft—Distribution of Free Tickets Does Not Influence Newspapers in Allotting Space for Reading Notices.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—The article below is a reply to the one which appeared in last week's issue of The Motion Picture News, under the title of "The Pass Disease and Its Victims." The author of the latter is a newspaper man. The writer of the former has served in nearly every capacity on several New York dailies. Both represent well-grounded viewpoints. The exhibitor will find food for thought in each of these articles.

SPEAKING of passes, I shudder to think of the future of Buffalo (or any other city, for that matter), if the newspaper men of the community are such characterless individuals as Charles B. Taylor would have us imagine from his description of "The Pass Disease and Its Victims," which appeared in last week's issue of The Motion Picture News.

I would like to pick out one or two of Mr. Taylor's examples and analyze them. He speaks of a certain individual of the advertising office of a daily paper who threatened to stop the notice automatically due a theatre manager, unless his needs in the way of passes were satisfied.

But, so the story goes, "The managing editor, being a 'prince of good fellows,' who gives everybody a square deal and who is in turn always 'taken care of' with all the passes he wants, and could have the whole theatre if he wanted it," gummed the advertising man's cards and the latter's threat amounted to nothing.

I wonder if Mr. Taylor realizes in what a position he would have placed the managing editor in the eyes of his boss and in the eyes of real newspaper men had he mentioned the name.

The managing editor may have appeared as a prince of good fellows to the theatre manager whose house he favored, but the very fact that he could be spoken of as one who was always taken care of, proves very conclusively that he was not to be trusted in his managerial capacity. In other words, he was not loyal to his paper—a thing fatal to the reputation of any newspaper man—or he could not have been mentioned in that way.

ANOTHER instance: "When a press agent enters the editorial sanctum the first thing that passes through an editor's mind is, 'Well, how many do I get?'" If such be true in any case, the editor is not worthy of the title. He is not an editor. He is a grafter posing as a newspaper man.

The thing in Mr. Taylor's article which impresses me is the same as that which has impressed me in every lament of the kind that I have ever read or heard. It is the constant allusion to pseudo-newspaper men who try their newly-acquired police cards or business cards on every occasion, and classifying them with newspaper men.

The newspaper man of standing rarely uses any identification, and he very, very seldom asks anyone for a pass. He doesn't need to.

He more often than not pays his way to the theatre. Don't seem astonished! I know any number of newspaper men who pay their way, year in and year out. I do not say that many of them are not invited by the friendly press agent and accept, or that many of them do not get theatre tickets through the regular channels by which tickets are distributed to members of the staff in every newspaper office.

BUT I do say, they don't ask for passes save in occasional instances when a friend may be publicity agent for an attraction which the editor or reporter particularly desires to see.

Last year there was a show on Broadway which was attracting the attention of the police. There was much public controversy over it, and the producers announced that they would give a midnight performance of the piece so that all the morning newspaper men might see it and pass judgment. Tickets were distributed in all the newspaper offices in New York.

On the night of the performance the theatre was packed. In fact, so packed that by one-thirty, before many of the working newspaper men of the city could have arrived, the doors were closed. Not one-quarter of the audience was made up of newspaper men of standing. The other three-quarters were made up of the midnight riff-raff of Broadway, women of the streets, copy boys from the offices, drifters from Park Row and what not.

I saw a night editor and a telegraph editor from a powerful morning daily unable to get in. Others equally well known on Park Row could not get in. And those men went to see what manner of show it was. I afterwards asked a reporter who knows everybody worth knowing in New York's newspaper life who was there. He replied that he saw very few persons whom he knew even by sight. The crowd was your average theatre man's idea of a newspaper crowd. The more is the pity.

A FEW nights later, several newspaper men sat in the press box with the publicity man of a New York house devoted to Grand Opera.

"Do you know," he asked, "this is the first time this winter that I have seen this many regular fellows in this box? I don't understand it. I get plenty of demands for passes from the small fellows who don't amount to anything, but I have to work my head off to get a real newspaper man here. What do you fellows want, anyway? Just let me know and I'll send you embossed invitations and tickets with raised letters on them if you so desire; but come up and see us."

"I've been after George," he said, slapping an old friend on the shoulder, "all winter to get him to come and see my show, and this is the first time he's been up this year."

And this is just what I have been leading up to. The theatre man, especially what you might call the smaller exhibitor—and I presume it will apply to the motion picture exhibitor—gets a wrong slant in looking at this problem. He puts too great confidence in the cheap pass fiend's ability to do him good or ill.

AS a matter of fact, the average fiend couldn't get a two-line item into the paper, and his influence in keeping legitimate matter out of the paper is as small as his intellect.

Every editor knows that theatrical, and incidentally motion picture news, is the most interesting routine stuff that comes to his desk. He knows that his public demands it. What his public demands he has got to print whether he wants to or not.

He also knows that a higher rate is charged for amusement than for other forms of advertising. And he is quite aware that this higher rate is charged because of the free space which is given to theatrical enterprises.

The sooner the exhibitor learns that he is sure to get interesting matter into the daily papers no matter how many passes he issues, the sooner he will cease to lament the greed of newspaper men; and the better off he will be when he quits confusing snippy advertising solicitors and reporters in embryo with those fellows who toil nightly over reams of copy toward which they must maintain an impersonal attitude.

HIPPODROME STAGE LARGER THAN LEGITIMATE

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Buffalo, Sept. 10.

Buffalo's newest and most elaborately equipped photoplay theatre, Shea's Hippodrome, opened to the public on Monday, August 31.

This theatre is located on Main street, near Chippewa, and is managed by William L. Sherry, former manager of the Lyric Theatre in this city. The interior decorations of the Hippodrome are among the handsomest in western New York. The stage is the largest in Buffalo, not excepting the legitimate theatres.

A fifteen-piece orchestra will play at all times, while George A. Bouchard, former organist of the Strand Theatre, will render selections on the $25,000 pipe organ. Prices are announced as ten, fifteen and twenty-five; boxes, fifty. The Paramount film service and musical acts will be the form of entertainment. The opening feature was H. B. Warner in "The Ghost Breaker."

IMPORTANT CAST FOR "SHORE ACRES"

For the production of "Shore Acres," immortalized by James A. Herne, the All-Star Feature Corporation has engaged the following cast:

Charles A. Stevenson, as Nathaniel Berry; William Riley Hatch, whose work in the All-Star productions "Paid In Full" and "Pierre of the Plains" are well remembered, as Martin Berry; Conway Tearle, the Broadway leading man, is cast as Sam; E. J. Connelley as Blake; Violet Horner, formerly with the Imp, Reliance, Biograph and Vitagraph companies, as Helen, and little Madge Evans in the part of Mildred.

Others of the cast are Philip Traub as Bob, Harry Knowles as Capt. Ben; Mrs. Evans.

John H. Pratt is now at Block Island with his company. William A. Thompson is in charge of the camera with his two assistants, and George Kleine is master of properties.

SNAKE ALMOST GETS ACTOR

The fifteen-foot python shown in "The Mystery of the Poison Pool," the Picture Playhouse company's film, was a captured snake, and the man, James Gordon, who had to climb the rope to escape from the cannibals below while the snake was coming down, faced real death.

The snake had to be shot within a foot of the actor's head and there was placed some distance away one of the best shots in the country, in order to kill the snake at the proper moment to make a good picture.

Exhibitors Will Appeal to Labor Federation

Grant Cleveland Operators $2.50 Weekly Advance on Latter's Demands Pending the Appeal—Two Houses Refuse Arbitration Terms

Cleveland, O., Sept. 10.

A WAGE increase of $2.50 weekly and an increase of twenty-five cents an hour for overtime work was granted the 142 motion picture operators in Cleveland on Thursday, September 3. The new scale was approved at a conference between the executive committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League and the executive committee of the Motion Picture Operators' Union.

A week ago the operators asked a general increase of $5 a week. The former minimum salary was $15 per week and the maximum was $25 per week. The $2.50 increase will stand pending an appeal by the exhibitors to the Federation of Labor.

On Thursday night a motorcycle squad of twelve members of the operators' union visited each of the 128 motion picture houses in Cleveland and announced to each manager the terms of the arbitration. It was felt that every manager could not be notified immediately by the Exhibitors' League. The operators' union therefore took it upon itself to see that the decision reached every manager.

Only two houses refused to recognize the result of the arbitration. They are the Ezella, corner of East Seventy-first street and Superior avenue, Gustave Caleb, manager; and the Pearl, situated in Brooklyn, a suburb south of Cleveland and including part of the sixth ward of the city. Otto Tschumper is manager of the latter house.

As a result of the refusal the managers of the above two houses personally operated their lanterns. It is expected that they will recognize the new scale soon.

Washington Screen Club Loses Its President

A. Dresner Leaves Local Film Exchange and Goes to Pittsburgh, as Manager for Warner's Features—Changes at Capital

Washington, Sept. 10.

SOME changes have taken place in local exchange circles, with the resignation of A. Dresner, of the Washington Film Exchange, who has accepted the managership of Warner's Features in Pittsburgh, Pa.

Mr. Dresner takes with him D. M. O'Brien, who was at the helm of the Electric Film and Supply Company here. Thus Washington is robbed of two of its most energetic exchange men. Mr. Dresner will be especially missed, as he has been here for the past several years and has built up an excellent business for the Universal between Philadelphia and Atlanta.

As president of the local Screen Club, Mr. Dresner has increased his popularity and circle of friends. He always introduced some novelties into the meetings of his organizations. Both Mr. Dresner and Mr. O'Brien carry with them the well wishes of Washington film circles.

The departure of these two men necessitates other changes. Henry F. Lovelle, of Philadelphia, succeeds Mr. Dresner at the head of the Washington Film Exchange. Geo. W. Smiley, who was on the road for the Electric Film Supply Company, now takes the management of that exchange.

J. H. Sullivan, special auditor of the Interstate Film Corporation, was recently here.

No Cheap Admission in East Indian Theatres

A Prosperous Motion Picture House in Karachi Charges Sixty-five Cents—Natives on Lookout for Slurs in Films

ONLY one cinematograph establishment is in operation in Karachi. It is in a substantial stone building to which a second story and corrugated iron roof are being added, writes Consul James Oliver Laing, Karachi, India. Two performances are given daily, both in the evening. The performance is long and the admission to a reserved seat is 2 rupees (65 cents).

A feature in films which should be avoided in this market is objectionable comment on or portrayal of religious subjects. Mohammedans, Hindus, and other religious sects are keen to see any apparent slur and to resent it bitterly.

The Karachi establishment referred to was recently sued by Mohammedans on account of a film used depicting a scene in the life of a prophet. The Mohammedans alleged that their prophet and their religion had been insulted. The court dismissed the suit, as no proof existed that the manager of the house had had any intention to insult anyone.

The film was merely a fanciful representation of a supposed incident in oriental life. Offense was nevertheless unintentionally given and the case dragged on for several days.

LIVE WIRE EXHIBITORS

EDITOR'S NOTE.—It is the desire of "The Motion Picture News" to include under this heading novel advertising ideas, successful schemes in the management, decoration and equipment of the theatre—everything, in fact, done by the exhibitor to stimulate his trade. We invite every exhibitor to write us about any new enterprise he has; also to come to us for advice or information along any line. Address: Editor, "The Motion Picture News," 220 West Forty-second Street, New York City.

MAKING THE BOXES PAY

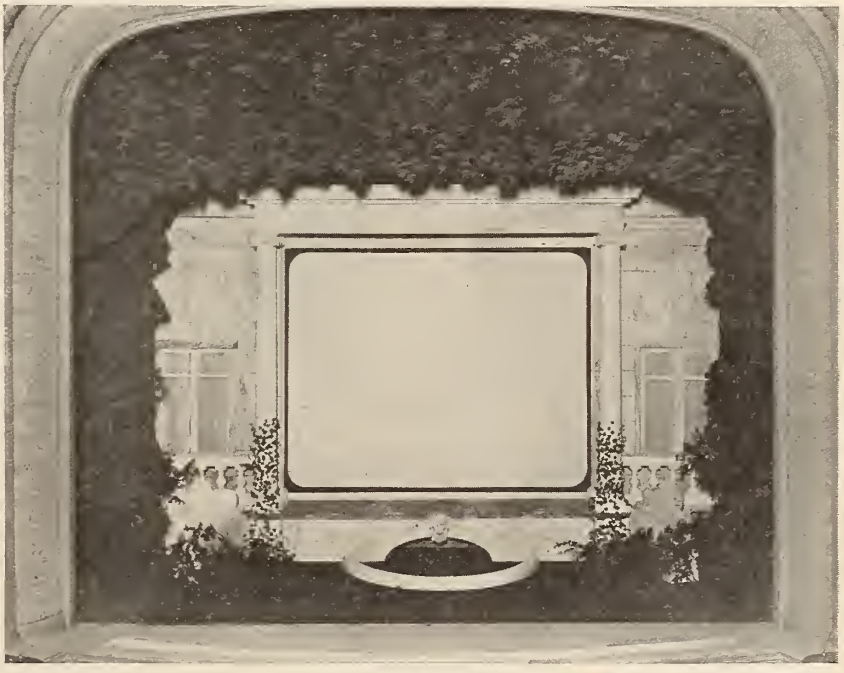
A NOVEL idea in the way of increasing box-office receipts was put into execution in Cincinnati by Manager Joseph Hennegan of the Lubin Theatre. He had purchased the Paramount program and knew he would show to capacity houses, but he dared not increase the price of admission, which is ten cents.

In order to overcome this price limit which he had established, he built across the center of his theatre a row of boxes, separated from the rows of seats before and behind by brass railings. Each box contained comfortable, movable chairs. The boxes will seat fifty persons. For seats in these boxes a charge of twenty cents or double the regular admission price is charged.

The public "caught on" with the new idea at once and box seats at the Lubin are always in demand. The boxes are located at what is believed by experts to be the most advantageous section of the theatre. Midway from the screen, they extend clear across the house.

GOOD FILMS BETTER THAN TRADING STAMPS

THE management of the Preston Theatre, Louisville, has done away with the plan of giving trading stamps to patrons on certain nights during the week.



The plan was not entirely successful and Manager Grove states that the money saved will be expended toward securing high-class feature films, and he feels that the patrons of the theatre will be better satisfied.

PUTTING PRICES WHERE THEY BELONG

THE Delft Theatre Company play all big features and are not afraid to put prices up where they belong. For instance, they showed "Neptune's Daughter" August 19, with prices at twenty-five, thirty-five and fifty cents, and turned away business from the Marquette Opera House, Marquette, Mich., seating 1,000 people. By popular demand it was played again August 21, and to capacity business a second time.

PALACE IN SYLVAN SETTING EFFECTIVE

WHAT is probably one of the most novel settings used on the stage of any motion picture house in the country has just been installed in Proctor's Broad Street Theatre, Elizabeth, N. J. It is designed to represent part of the exterior of a palace in a sylvan glade.

STAGE OF PROCTOR'S BROAD STREET THEATRE, ELIZABETH, N. J., SHOWING NEW STAGE SETTING.

The lions, pillars and balustrades are of concrete, the windows are of wood and may be opened, and the curtains at the windows are rich lace. The foliage used in the setting is real, although it has been treated with a preservative preparation. Special lighting effects are thrown on the setting at each opening, and the electrical fountain is operated for a few minutes.

The setting was designed by B. A. Holway, manager of the theatre, and Joseph Eilbacher, a concrete ornament manufacturer, and it has attracted much attention from the patrons of the Broad street house.

"Mary Pickford Week" was observed at the Broad Street Theatre during the week beginning August 31. It was widely advertised through the newspapers and by means of 5,000 special programs distributed at the theatre and in local stores. In spite of the intense heat recently and the fact that the city's industries have been hard hit by the war, the Broad street house has been enjoying a record attendance.

The program for the week was made up as follows: Monday and Tuesday, "The Eagle's Mate"; Wednesday, "Hearts Adrift"; Thursday, "Caprice" and "In the Season of Buds" (Biograph); Friday, "Tess of the Storm Country" and "Love's Refrain" (Imp), and Saturday, "In the Bishop's Carriage."

THE BEST NONE TOO GOOD

THE Liberty Theatre, Washington, D. C., under the management of Max Biron, is an excellent example of a well conducted resident theatre in the northwest section. The program consists of a feature and two additional reels, showing for the first time in that vicinity.

The house is one of the comparatively new theatres, built with the idea of attractive architecture, decoration, spacious aisles and foyer, high ceilings and good ventilation.

Speaking to Mr. Biron he made these statements:

"I have had a contest here to maintain myself against competitors who show seven, eight and sometimes nine reels, but I believe I have won out in quality. That counts in the long run in everything, motion pictures included. I have always a good attendance and at rush hours we play beyond capacity. Courtesy is another asset for the exhibitor, and to this I pay especial attention. Patrons not only expect but they appreciate it and it is due them from the management. It gives dignity to the house. It pleases me to note that automobiles have begun to line up before the Liberty and that the young folks dress up as much to attend this playhouse in their neighborhood, as if they were going to a theatre down town. I expect increased popularity and patronage during the fall and winter seasons."

HIS RISE IN FIVE YEARS

ENTERING the motion picture field in Louisville five years ago, at which time there were only four houses in operation in the city, Louis J. Dittmar, owner of the Majestic Theatre, and prominently identified with the various exhibitors' organizations in Kentucky, has wrought an unusual measure of suecess from his opportunities.

The many friends of Mr. Dittmar in the Main street wholesale district bade him "good-bye and good luck" with a little incredulous smile or knowing wink when he gave up his job as salesman for a commission shoe house to make his first venture in the motion picture business.

"I believed that a wonderful field of opportunity lay ahead of the business," said Mr. Dittmar, "and realizing that it was just then beginning to develop in this city, I decided to take a chance."

His first venture was in 1908, when he erected a house on the site of his present theatre at a cost of $20,000. The business rapidly grew beyond his expectations, and in 1911 it became necessary to tear down the old Majestic, and a building costing $50,000 went up in its place. The new Majestic is one of the most beautiful in the city, with a seating capacity of 650. Eight to ten performances are given daily throughout the week.

Mr. Dittmar is a believer in continual, consistent advertising.

Jack London Film, "Burning Daylight," Released

Story Paints Vivid Picture of Frozen North Before the Big Gold Strikes in the Klondike District

THE story of Jack London's "Burning Daylight" tells of the men in the Frozen North before the big gold strike in the Klondike, and of the one who was pre-eminently the leader, the first in enthusiasm and energy, the most daring, the most picturesque.

So long had he been known as "Burning Daylight" from his frequent exhortation, "Hustle, daylight's burning!" that his real name, Elam Harnish, was almost forgotten.

The play opens with a dull evening at the Tivoli, a saloon and dancehall in Circle City, Alaska, in midwinter. Everyone is bored until the dramatic entrance of Burning Daylight, when his blithe leadership asserts itself and he becomes the center of attraction, from Nell, a dancehall girl, who loves him, down to the newest tenderfoot.

Watching Burning Daylight as the play unfolds, we get a true picture of life as it was lived in those early Klondike days, the picturesque side of its romance and daring; the feats of endurance on the trail, as when Burning Daylight makes the round trip between Circle City and Dyea in sixty days, often on unbroken trail, and the reckless bravado of its men, as when Kearns wins $127,000 in one game of poker.

All through the earlier scenes runs Burning Daylight's hunch that the big strike is coming soon, and we soon see that his faith is justified, when Carmack, a squawman, strikes gold "From the grass roots down." From that time on Burning Daylight bends every energy to "riding his hunch," but not until he accumulates eleven millions does he pull out for the States and a happy life. The drama is a very epic of the North.

HOBART BOSWORTH IN "BURNING DAYLIGHT," FROM THE NOVEL BY JACK LONDON.

Stage Parker Novel in Elaborate Settings

Scenes of "The Seats of the Mighty" Rich in Rugs, Tapestries, Furniture and Gorgeous Decorations, Highly Insured

IN one of the scenes of the film version of Sir Gilbert Parker's "Seats of the Mighty," now in course of production by the Colonial Motion Picture Company, the tapestries, rugs, furniture and other decorations borrowed for the occasion are said to be worth $150,000. Insurance has been placed on the effects for that amount.

With all this magnificence of setting, equal to the efforts of "legitimate" producers, "The Seats of the Mighty" should become as well known for its rich sets as for its acting.

The company has obtained an all star cast for the production, including Millicent Evans as Alixe, Lionel Barrymore as Doltaire, Glen White as Robert Moray, and Thomas Jefferson, as Louis XV.

It Is for the Service of the Buyer and the Seller Alike. All Questions Will Be Answered in These Columns and Communications Will Be Welcomed

Not "What," but "How"

IN these days of feature films when exhibitors are vying with one another to make their theatres more attractive, each trying to "put one over" on his rival or go him one better, there is nothing that will not bear a trial.

Anything that will tend to give clearer pictures, better ventilation, or more comfort to patrons will swell the box office receipts. An attractive lobby display, roomy seats, appropriate music, good projections, are all that at first glance seem necessary to a theatre. But there are dozens of what I shall term "accessories to the moving picture theatre" that go to make a picture theatre cozy, restful, attractive and the ideal place of amusement.

Much is being said, preached, printed and read these days regarding exhibitors and what they should be, and what they should do. But what some exhibitors need is someone to tell them, not WHAT, but HOW.

All the trade publications devote columns telling exhibitors what should be done and what should not be done in the interests of the business, but a certain percentage of exhibitors still seem to continue in the same old rut. In these columns we will endeavor to show how by the use of the proper "accessories to the moving picture theatre," the exhibitor makes good.

INEXPENSIVE BUT EFFECTIVE VENTILATION

ONE of the most inexpensive and efficient ventilating systems ever installed in a motion picture theatre is the one that keeps the air sweet and cool in the Mirth Theatre, Kinnikinnic and Potter avenues, Milwaukee.

As in all modern buildings, the Mirth Theatre has an air space between the inner and outer walls, and it is this space that Manager George J. Bauch has utilized with such good results.

When the plans for the Mirth Theatre had been drawn up and practically O. K.'ed it was discovered that no provisions had been made for ventilating the building. It was then that the basis for their present ventilating system was laid.

Openings were made in the walls along the base board and directly under the ceiling, into which were fitted registers which could be opened or closed from a central control. Mounted on the roof in an air-tight house were two two-thirds horsepower fans which drew the air directly from the theatres either through the upper or lower registers, the upper registers being used in the summer to draw the heat generated by the lights off the ceiling, and in the winter the lower registers were used to bring this heat down on to the floor before drawing it up through the fans.

Soon after the theatre was opened a defect was discovered in the system that came pretty nearly putting the theatre out of business. The system worked splendidly until one cold day, when both fans were working it was discovered that the architect had forgotten to provide any way for the fresh air to enter, unless it came in through the entrance, which it was doing at such a rate that it was impossible to stand near the door. The fans were turned off that night, and it looked as though the ventilating system could only be used in the warm weather.

Providentially, for it was not through any foresight, the architect had located a practically air-tight room directly under the stage which contained the heating plant. A false sheet iron ceiling was placed six inches below the brick ceiling of this room and registers were placed leading into the theatre. A coal shute leads into this boiler room and into this was run a pipe to draw the fresh air from the outside.

Now when the fans are put on there is no more trouble at the entrance, for the air is drawn in from the rear, and is heated in the winter by the heat from the boiler, and is cooled in the summer by a spray of water in the coal chute.

PLENTY OF LIGHTING

W. FRED BOSSNER, proprietor of the New Boz Theatre, Boise, Idaho, believes that ten cents is a good standard price for a clean picture, and that if the price is above that mark it will mean a material falling off in the business. Mr. Bossner's success in the motion picture business has been phenomenal; his first picture venture here some five years ago was such a success that his house was too small, and he had a second one built with almost double the seating capacity, and the house has been a winner from the first.

Lighting a house is one of the big attractions in any theatre building, states Mr. Bossner, and it can be seen that he spared no expense in having the Boz the best lighted theatre in the city. The indirect lighting system is used, and when the lights are turned on the theatre is so bright that a written post-card can be read in any part of the house.

Another feature in which Mr. Bossner excels in the business is giving his patrons plenty of time for each picture, and descriptive reading between pictures, which had made quite a hit at his playhouse. Current-event pictures between the different pictures are shown three nights weekly at the theatre, and are also proving a good drawing card.

Going back to the price schedule, Mr. Bossner was asked why he did not think the better and more costly pictures put out in recent years should not command a higher admission price. His reply was that the motion picture theatre was the poor man's theatre, yet one which afforded attractions that the moderately well off and the rich could enjoy, that as soon as the price was advanced it put the show beyond the poor man's purse most of the time.

Business at all performances has been good in the Milwaukee motion picture theatres.

PEERLESS STUDIO EQUIPPED FOR FOUR COMPANIES

The Peerless Feature Producing Company is the newest film concern to make its presence felt, with a $100,000 studio just completed at Fort Lee, New Jersey. The Peerless company will be able to produce one feature a week. The stage of the studio is so ample that four companies can work at one time on it.

Co-operation Will Be Alco Policy

Company Plans to Bring About Closer Understanding Between Exhibitors and Exchanges Concerning First Run Pictures

THE Alco Film Corporation announces a reform policy affecting the relations between exchanges and exhibitors which should be welcomed with open arms by motion picture managers throughout the country.

Every theatre owner has had the unsatisfactory experience of being promised exclusive territorial service for an early run on a picture and has discovered that the exchange man sometimes had gone directly to his competitor across the street or in the next block and sold the same picture on terms that conflicted with his terms.

WALTER HOFF SEELY

Perhaps the exhibitor did not discover this action until it was too late to change his program, and as a consequence he suffered a loss in both attendance and prestige on account of the duplicity of the exchange man.

The Alco plan is designated to give a square deal to the exhibitor in every instance. The exchange man will not be allowed to break promises.

Every exhibitor who books an Alco picture will be absolutely sure that his competitor will not be able to get the same picture before or at the same time, provided the exhibitor books for an early run. Also, no competing exhibitor will be able to get the same picture at a date that will permit him to advertise a date of showing which will in any way affect the attendance of the public at the first man's theatre.

The Alco head office will be behind every exhibitor to see that he gets this square deal.

If for any cause the exchange service is not satisfactory in every way the exhibitor is requested to appeal direct to the head office when full redress will be forthcoming.

The head office wants all exhibitors to feel that they are dealing directly with it and that the company recognizes that it is worth more to have every exhibitor who books the Alco features, satisfied with and enthusiastic over the service rendered, than to have one disgruntled customer.

The Alco's definite instructions to the exchange man are:

"Never promise anything to any exhibitor which you cannot fulfill, and when you do promise anything be sure that that promise is carried out."

The impartial and universal enforcement of this policy is by no means the least of the duties which Walter Hoff Seely and Al Lichtmann, president and vice-president of Alco, have set for themselves.

AN OLD FOLKS MATINEE

MANAGER OSCAR FINCH, of the Diamond Theatre, 2410 Lake street, Omaha, and Manager Jensen, of the Lothrop Theatre, Twenty-fourth and Lothrop streets, have attracted considerable favorable attention in Omaha recently by issuing perpetual invitations to the aged folks in the Old People's Home, nearby, to attend their shows. Their attitude toward the old people, most of whom would never see a picture were it not for the invitations of the generous exhibitors, has made them many friends and consequent patrons.

Last Monday, Manager Finch gave a special matinee for the old folks, even assuming their car fare to and from the show. Both theatres have entertained them in a body several times.

ROTHAPFEL MEETS OLD FRIEND

Dr. W. Taylor, of the U. S. Navy, who at present is recruiting officer in Newark, N. J., stopped abruptly in the entrance of the Strand Theatre as S. L. Rothapfel, the managing director came out from the auditorium. Mr. Rothapfel also stopped.

"Pardon me, but your face looks very familiar," said the naval officer."

"Yes?" said the manager. "My name is Rothapfel—I believe I know you, too. Aren't you Dr. Taylor, of the Navy?"

It did not take the two men long to renew their acquaintance, which dates back to 1901. At that time they were shipmates, or at least serving their country on the U. S. S. "Bancroft," Dr. Taylor as the ship's surgeon and Mr. Rothapfel as a corporal.

Advises Barker To Put Shakespeare in Films

Marston Declares That the English Producer Should Devote His Talent to Al Fresco Scenes of the Bard of Avon

LAWRENCE MARSTON, principal director of one of the original "Big Four" motion picture companies, advises Granville Barker, London's foremost producer of Shakespeare on the speaking stage, to jump into motion pictures.

"It is an unwritten law of the motion picture studio that when scenes are located amid Nature's backgrounds they must be filmed in the open," he said recently. "This ability to stage Shakespeare and other classics out of doors is the greatest asset of the cinematograph and if Granville Barker were sincere in his efforts to give Shakespeare the best mountings possible he would renounce the indoor stage and devote himself to elevating an art which, I must confess, sadly needs elevation. Why not follow in the footsteps of the Coburn Players and stage Shakespeare, wherever the play calls for it, al fresco?

"It is Mr. Barker's ambition to present the classics without the arbitrary divisions of acts and scenes. I think the cinematograph has anticipated him in this. Perhaps, indeed, he may have taken a hint from the screen plays. Motion picture exhibitors do not find it difficult to hold the attention of the public.

"Mountains and cascades, real woods and the expanse of waters can only be shown with fidelity to Nature on the motion picture screen. Even in the most spectacular of Hippodrome and Manhattan Opera House productions the introduction of a ship or railroad engine, no matter how elaborate the mechanics of the set, merely excites admiration for the ingenuity of the stage director.

Following the Pictures, Not the Music

By E. A. AHERN

THE following is from a young lady pianist in Illinois, who wishes her name withheld:

"I have read your articles in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS and find them to be of great value to me. I am very much interested in my work, but certainly play under difficulties.

"There has been a young violinist working with me. Being a conservatory graduate, he naturally thinks he should get up the programs.

"This is the way he goes about it: One or two violin solos from 7:30 p. m. to 7:50 p. m. Then he plays as fast as he can. For the dramas we play waltzes and waltzes until I know the audience is waltzed to death. Then for comedies he plays popular songs through once, regardless of whether the song fits the situations or not. Next follows drama, and we waltz some more. Well, he left after having been here about two or three weeks.

"Here is my arrangement of music for my show the other night:

"The opener—A lively rag and a waltz selection P. P. reel No. 1. A Gypsy Story with some tragedy, music, 'Spooky Spook,' as it was a mysterious part. Then I made a pretty waltz out of the last part, as the scenes were of a sad nature; also played 'Melody,' a 4-4 andante movement.

"For the intermission, 'Too Much Mustard.' For reel No. 2, a comedy. As there was no sense to the picture I played a lively rag and 'Dixie Rube,' interpolating a popular song chorus or two. For reel No. 3, a two-reel feature, I played 'Laces and Graces,' a waltz and reverie. For the second part, 'Parade of the Flowers,' three step and a waltz.

"I have to turn my head around in order to see the pictures, and sometimes it gets very tiresome. My manager, I don't believe, takes as much interest in his business as I do in my end of it, for he won't run off the picture for me. So I do the best I can, and I sometimes get a bit discouraged, but in order to hold my position I have to do as he says.

"If you have any good dramatic music I wish you would publish a list of it."

I do not wish to criticize this manager or the way he conducts his business, as it is out of my field, but this pianist surely has my sympathy. She is trying to make something out of the pictures, but is surely handicapped by having to contend with such an employee. As to this young man's ideas of picture playing, he lasted about as long as anyone else does that plays in such a fashion.

Because one happens to be fortunate enough to be able to attend a conservatory, that doesn't mean that audiences comes to a picture theatre to hear them go through a lot of difficult music. As I said in one of my previous articles, we must use our brains as well as our fingers. If this young man had just stopped to reason things out, he might have been on the job yet.

There was a time when a person with a strong arm held down the jobs. The louder one played, the longer the jobs lasted; very little brain work was required, but those days have passed. I remember a theatre that advertised its pianist as "The man that played to beat the band," and he certainly did.

I lost my job one time to a party that worked a double shift. Played the shows and after the show used to put on boxing exhibitions. He was very "strong" in each place. But as I say, those times are no more. We have to cut out the "Bang! Bang!" and "Blue Notes" and get down to real business, and entertain as well as follow the pictures.

For all of my Woodland pictures, when there is no dramatic music required, like some of the pictures taken by the Edison people in Maine about a year ago, I use caprices and schottisches like "Birds in the Brook," "Dance of the Bumble Bees" and "Dance of the Brownies," etc.

For illustration, the following is the music I used for "Caprice," by the Famous Players with Mary Pickford: "Wood Nymphs," a polka; rondo caprice, "When a Maid Comes Knocking at Your Heart," from the "Firefly"; "Blushing Rose," serenade; "Sympathy," from the "Firefly"; "Garden Matinee," 4-4 moderato; "Snow Queen," 6-8 novellette; "Venetian Love Song," from "A Day in Venice," by Ethelbert Nevin (I play this on the organ; it is very expressive); "The Dawn of Spring," 4-4; "Fairy Phantoms"; "Allsamee," 2-4, for the fire scene; "Nympha," 3-4; "Love Is Like a Fire Fly," from the "Firefly."

There were only one or two places in this four-reel picture where there was any need of dramatic music. I humored the music by means of retards, crescendos,. accelerates, to suit the action of the players.

For the pathetic part I used the organ, which helped bring out the solemnity of the scenes. For the fire scene I used a piece of music with a good bass part, increasing the tempo as the fire grew.

Outside of these few scenes I played my music in a light and breezy manner, as this was the general idea of the story.

I also arranged my music, as you will see, so as not to have two pieces of the same rhythm following one another; still the music was in keeping with the picture, at the same time pleasing to the ear.

This is one point you will notice I am very emphatic on. Occasionally we have an orchestra to play at this house for two months during the summer. When we have any picture like the ones just mentioned to play for, I have the drummer use a bird whistle when scenes are in the woods; and when the scenes are inside (studio scenes) for any length of time, I have the drummer stop until outside; or if the scenes are short I have him whistle P. P. until outside again. This helps to give the atmosphere. If the scenes are of a hurried nature we don't use the whistles.

Here is where I clashed with the drummer. At one time he said: "Say, there isn't any whistle part written in this piece." I replied: "Well, let's put it in, as it will help out the picture."

At another time he was using the bells in a picture that had a tendency to distract the attention from the story, and I suggested not playing them. He got rather angry and said: "What's the matter with you? Don't you play the music the way it is written?"

I am using these little incidents to help convey to you my ideas of playing the pictures. I make my music for the picture by these little tricks, and sometimes when playing with others, I have to explain to them—that we are employed to follow the pictures, not the music.

ELMWOOD DEDICATES NEW ORGAN

THE opening recitals on the large Ernest M. Skinner pipe organ at the Elmwood Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., takes place on Saturday afternoon, August 29, when Bertram S. Forbes is to render an exceptional program. The organ at the Elmwood has been especially built by the Skinner company of Boston, Mass. It has fifty-one speaking stops and twelve couplers. It is divided into five compartments, operated electrically from a console in the orchestra pit.

Among the opening numbers of the program are "Pique Dame" overture, Suppe; Barcarolle from "Les Contes D'Hoffman"; "Intermezzo," by Seiss, and Boccherini's "Menuett."

All of the following week was known as "dedication week," and the management invited the public to suggest selections for organ which will be rendered in the order of priority and in so far as time and program will permit. The organ has been in process of construction at the Elmwood for the past three months and is a splendid addition to the house.

EVELYN NESBIT THAW IN FILMS

Evelyn Nesbit Thaw is the latest recruit to the motion-picture field. Mrs. Thaw can be seen daily these hot days dividing her time between the Lubin studio in Philadelphia and Betzwood and nearby country and seashore resorts where she is completing the five-reel dramatic story entitled, "Threads of Destiny."

Fred Mace, the well-known comedian and motion-picture man, has Mrs. Thaw under contract, and under a special arrangement with Siegmund Lubin, will present her to the public. Mr. Mace and Mr. Joseph W. Smiley are jointly producing "Threads of Destiny," and incidentally Mr. Smiley is playing one of the greatest roles of his picture career as the Chief of the Russian Secret Police.

NORMA PHILLIPS ("OUR MUTUAL GIRL") MEETS DANIEL FROHMAN

Blazing the Film Trail in the Ozarks

Pictures Are Just Making Their Debut in the Country of "The Hill-Billies"—Nothing but Tent Shows Known

Kansas City, Mo., Sept. 10.

THE moving picture film is making its debut into the backwoods Ozark section of Missouri and Arkansas—the most backward and secluded part of the Central West. A half dozen tent shows, starting out from Kansas City, St. Louis and Springfield, are going through the mountains, drawing crowds at every town and exhibiting films that were discarded long ago in the cities.

The hill-billy likes the picture show. Let it be advertised that a tent show will exhibit one or two nights in a little, far-from-the-railroad town the entire countryside will turn out. From hollow and cove and mountain top, carrying lanterns, walking and riding, the Ozarkers pour out to the show.

Then for an hour the audience will sit amost breathless while the films are run off. Many of them, perhaps, have never seen a train, some have spent their entire life in the hills and only know of an outside civilization from seeing an occasional "furriner" whipping the streams for bass and trout, but the "lure of the silent drama" is at work.

Recently one of these tent shows penetrated to Old Horton, near the intersection of the Howell, Douglas and Ozark county lines in Missouri. It was there that the Collins fued between different factions of the family bearing that name resulted in the stoning of one woman last spring after a series of fightings and killings that have gone for nearly fifteen years. It is said that members of both factions attended the show armed and ready to strike if the scantest occasion arose. But it was held in silence and the audience quickly dispersed to their homes.

In Oregon county, another show reached Alton, the secluded county seat to which federal revenue officers make frequent raids after moonshining native. In Branson, on the White River, a show is given on certain days every week.

In most parts of the Ozarks, however, the picture show is seen only once or twice a year. The tent show is carried in wagons and the projecting power used is acetylene. Pine knots or lanterns furnish the other needed illumination and an admission fee of ten cents is charged. It cannot be more than that.

The Ozarker uses money as a medium of exchange only rarely and with his customarily large family, he would be unable to obtain a larger admission fee.

For the exhibitor in the Ozarks, the life is that of a carnival troupe. Traveling from town to town in a wagon by day, setting up his tent at night, constructing rough benches from lumber or even logs, he is a circus magnate, not an exhibitor as the name is known elsewhere.

His outfit in most cases will be old and almost worn out, the film will splutter and jerk on the screen. But what's the difference—the hill-billy does not know any better and it pays well.

Yes, exhibiting in the Ozarks is a strenuous game. But it is a profitable one—for the man who knows how.

George E. Quisenberry.

FILM NEWS FROM FOREIGN PARTS

Motion Pictures Make Stronger Appeal to the Amusement Public of Rio de Janeiro Than Any Other Form of Entertainment—Fifty Film Theatres in China, All Located in Treaty Ports of the Celestial Kingdom—Chinese Prefer Comic, Historical and War Scenes.

MOVING-PICTURE show houses, or cinema theatres, as they are known here, writes Consul General Julius G. Lay, Rio de Janeiro, constitute the most popular form of indoor public diversion in Rio de Janeiro, and the successful maintenance of at least five large theatres in the down-town district of this city, with about 30 other show houses scattered throughout the city, is evidence that they are well patronized.

The Companhia Cinematographica Brasileira, Largo do Carioca, 13, controls some of the most important show houses in Rio de Janeiro and in many other cities in Brazil. It has four houses in this city—the Pathé, with a seating capacity of six hundred; Odeon, with five hundred chairs; Avenida, with four hundred; and the Parc Fluminense, with one thousand. In the city of Bello Horizonto, State of Minas Geraes, there are three first-class show houses, one of which, the Cinoma Commercio, with a capacity of four hundred, is owned by this company; it also controls the largest show house in Juiz de Fora, State of Minas Geraes, with a capacity of one thousand, as well as others in other cities in and beyond this consular district.

Another large distributor of films is J. R. Staffa, Avenida Rio Branco, 179, Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, who, besides owning and operating the Parisienne, with a capacity of five hundred, supplies films for about one hundred other show houses throughout Brazil.

Mr. Gustavo José de Mattos is now remodeling several large stores and will, in the course of a month, open the Ciné Palais, at Avenida Rio Branco, 147, Rio de Janeiro.

Character of Exhibition

There are six to eight exhibitions per day in each show house, commencing at 1:30 p. m. and ending at about 10:30 p. m., the average show running about 2,000 meters (meter = 3.28 feet) of films, usually including two or three separate subjects, except on certain occasions, when special extremely long historic or dramatic films are exhibited. Programs are changed Mondays and Thursdays in Rio de Janeiro, but in the smaller towns every other day.

All moving-picture show-house machines are operated by electricity, in which manner the lighting is also furnished.

The public is very particular about the class and quality of the films produced, and it is readily perceivable to any person who has visited the moving-picture show houses here that only the very best films are used. Love, intrigue, drama, spectacular, and tragic films, in the order named, seem to have the largest demand. Comic, scenic, and war pictures are also shown, and historical pictures when well executed are well patronized.

Recent exhibitions of the Life of Napoleon, the Fall of Rome, and similar films were well received. Up to recently cowboy and western pictures were popular, but the public seems to have become tired of them. Industrial and educational pictures are not much in demand, and films of Indian warfare and those involving the negro question will not be put on by the managers.

The reading matter should in every instance be in Portuguese, the language of Brazil.

The following are the most popular makes of films in Rio de Janeiro at present: Gaumont, French; Pathé, French; Cines, Italian; Nordisk, Danish; Messter, German; and Vitagraph, American.

Attitude Concerning American Films

American films have been shown here in the past, and importers state that they have been given a fair trial, but the trade in American films has dropped considerably in the last few years because the price is higher than European films illustrating the same class of subjects, and the manner of presenting the plots and situations with plenty of intrigue in the European films appeals more strongly to the public here.

The manager of one of the largest importing firms asserted that American manufacturers have apparently overlooked the very important feature of employing a competent translator for the reading matter on the films.

The rental price of films depends largely on the quality and original purchase price, but an average program costs Rs. 20$000 ($6.47) per day, with permission to change twice per week.

The average cost of European films is about 25 cents (American currency) per meter (39.37 inches).

The extremely high import duty on films is the principal reason why their use has not been more extensive here: They are dutiable at Rs. 25$000 per kilo, which is equivalent to $5.63 per pound, American currency. Films average about 100 meters per kilo (2.2 pounds). They are packed in individual round tins, and these in turn packed in wooden cases, the size conforming with the order, thus reaching this market in good condition.

Motion-picture machines are dutiable at Rs. 60$000 each, which is equivalent to $29.75 (American currency). There are several additional small taxes for handling, stamps, etc., as well as customs-broker's charges.

There are several manufacturers of films here, but this industry has been carried on only on a small scale.

Moving-Pictures in the Far East

The development of the moving-picture business in China is proceeding slowly and the various promoters are not finding that the undertaking at present is very remunerative, yet, at the same time, they are sanguine as to the possibilities in the not-far-distant future, writes Vice-Consul General A. E. Carleton, Hongkong.

As a matter of fact, the moving-picture shows can not have the same success in the Far East, especially in China, as in other parts of the world without an immense outlay of money for educational purposes. The Chinese in and about the treaty ports have taken kindly to this form of entertainment, but only after years of patient endeavor, and those living away from the coast ports, who are not in touch with western people, are scarcely aware of the existence of these shows.

It thus will be seen at a glance that the possibilities are really immense for the development of a tremendous business in this line, but the trade must be created by consistent work. Having interested the Chinese sufficiently, there is no limit to the expansion of the moving-picture shows.

There are not 50 cinematograph shows in all China and Macao, and all of these are in the treaty ports. In the Philippines there are reported to be over seventy-five, and the limitations have by no means been reached. In Hongkong and Kowloon there are only five in continuous operation, and with a population of over half a million it seems not unlikely that in a few years this number will be more than doubled.

The Obstacles Encountered

In this colony the one great difficulty seems to be a matter of price, for the present rates of admission are beyond the average Chinese, and shows with popular prices have not been experimented with beyond a tentative attempt, which unfortunately proved a failure. This, however, was some time ago, before the Chinese in general learned to appreciate their value. It might be tried again with far better results.

The chief hindrance to a greater development of these forms of entertainment appears to exist in the Chinese themselves, for they do not care to participate in making films of scenes, customs, etc., of their own country. Of course, this objection has been in a measure done away with in the treaty ports, where they have come in touch with western civilization to a certain degree.

Even in Hongkong and Kowloon this superstition is still pronounced. The writer has in mind an American company which worked for two months with some Chinese actors on a Chinese story, the principal point of objection being that the leading man was strongly adverse to being placed in a coffin. He was astonished to find himself alive after his incarceration, and in fact was so pleased over his restoration to life that he laughed, thereby spoiling the film in its most tragic part.

It is such ingrained antipathy that so handicaps the moving-picture makers in China. It thus means a long educational propaganda before success is reached.

Film Preferences and Costs

As a matter of fact the films now generally in use in Hongkong and in the treaty ports are over 40 per cent. second-hand films, and of the total in use it is estimated that twenty-five per cent. only are American. The short pieces are four hundred feet or five hundred feet in length. Most of these seconds are imported from Europe; and some of these occasionally are years old, which have gone the rounds of Europe, eventually finding their way to the Far East.

It is not uncommon to pay only $5 gold for a complete film of American production, whereas the export price for these films was originally seven cents gold per foot. The customary price in Hongkong, the writer is informed, is about six cents gold for new films. Under the circumstances the market for new material here is not good, for the managers of the movies in Hongkong confessedly buy the second grades.

The tastes of the better-educated Chinese materially differ from those living, for instance, in Canton, as was demonstrated a short time since, when the Anthony and Cleopatra film had a good run in Hongkong, but in Canton was taken off the second night, as the people did not care for it. As a rule the Chinese prefer comics, historical, and war; they prefer short pictures, where there is plenty of movement. The drama of the western world is outside of their knowledge and understanding. It is necessary to give them films in which the pictures themselves are self-explanatory.

High Prices Limit Attendance

The theatre prices in Hongkong are far from being popular, ranging as they do from about thirty-five cents to seventy-five cents gold for European theatres and half these amounts for the Chinese theatres. As a result these shows attract only a certain class of people and are not for the masses. The Europeans form a small percentage of the audience as a general rule, as they are adverse to paying these amounts.

Regarding the prices, which to foreigners appear extravagant, there is perhaps a logical explanation more applicable perhaps to a small theatre-going community like Hongkong than to most cities. Distances are greater than it seems possible for so small a place, because the transportation facilities from sections of the Peak district or from Kowloon are slow, tedious and expensive.

These difficulties are not imaginary. This is one of the reasons why there are only two shows an evening, one commencing at 7:15 and the other at 9:15, each practically of two hours' duration. Under the local conditions the people do not care to attend shows of an hour's duration.

Then the Chinese theatres continue for hours, and naturally the Chinese can not be content to stay only for a short period; they desire and insist upon a long sitting.

Managers of local theatres have tried all sorts of schemes to shorten the shows and likewise lessen the prices. Under the circumstances and on account of the heavy expenses for operating them it does not seem possible to lessen the admission charges very much. Continuous performances of, say one hour each would probably not be popular in Hongkong, and therefore the present method in general must be adhered to.

The language question is one of some difficulty in China, and the expense of having the readings in Chinese is large under the present conditions, where the number of users is limited to such a few theatres. The lack of a chain of theatres seriously handicaps the business, both as to language and purchase of new films. As a result, the two European shows under European management are using English readings.

Variety Entertainments

The custom in Hongkong seems to be to use one long film and fill up the rest with short films. One of the local theatres has a sort of a variety entertainment as well, although pictures are the principal feature.

In Hongkong an American company has been here for some time manufacturing Chinese pictures at an average cost of $2,000 (gold) for films of the usual length. These films are in most cases for the Chinese alone, although this company has taken many of great educational merit, which are being used in the United States, not only in the movies but for sale to periodicals.

At the best the undertaking has not as yet been a financial success for the reason indicated. If my information is correct, the proportion of American films seen here is small, and the reason appears to be that the producers do not give what the local market demands. As before indicated, the Chinese demand movement in every picture—heavy tragedy or love pictures do not appeal to them.

Popularity at Commercial Metropolis

The moving-picture theatres of Shanghai draw their patrons from the 15,000 foreign inhabitants and from a very small portion of the 1,000,000 natives dwelling in the Native City and Foreign Settlements, writes Consul General Thomas Sammons, Shanghai. The steadily increasing audiences and erection of new theatres testify to the growing popularity of the films.

Comic plays and scenes are perhaps best received in Shanghai. American films are well liked, because of their realism, purposefulness, and strength of plot, though practically every known make is screened here.

Five per cent. ad valorem duty is collected on imported films. The rental paid for supplies of first-class films is about fifty dollars per week, which includes one chance, though the methods of renting films vary greatly, and in some cases the films are rented by the meter per night. For medium-class films the rental is about $37.50 per week. When rented by the meter (39.37 inches), the price per night is about one cent. per meter for films which have not been on exhibition at one or more of the other theatres.

Films which have been shown in other theatres rent for about one-half cent per meter.

The purchase price for new films is eight to fifteen cents per foot, while the price for second-hand films is one to five cents per foot. However, as a general rule, films are rented.

Erection of New Theater

A new spacious moving-picture theater, the New Olympic, is being erected at the junction of Carter and Bubbling Well Roads, and will be operated under the management of Mr. Ramos.

Each of the theatres here shows about five thousand feet of film during the one daily performance given. They are all electrically lighted and operated. The films are changed biweekly, Wednesdays and Saturdays.

Films intended for use in this climate should be packed in sealed tins. None of the Shanghai moving-picture theatres deal in machines or supplies. There are two firms here which deal in cameras for taking films, one of which also manufactures films.

To Raise Prices or Not to Raise Them

Editor, The Motion Picture News,
New York City:

Dear Sir.—Are admission prices too low in the smaller cities of the country, or could the exhibitors do a better business by advancing the scale and putting in better pictures? This is a question with which western New York exhibitors have been wrestling for many months, and the question has not been answered satisfactorily to this day.

Every agent who comes through this section with special features to sell tells of the admission prices that are secured in New York, and wonders why Rochester motion picture men cannot charge a like scale, say from 25 to 50 cents for the best pictures.

These men, of course, are interested only in the sale of their feature films. They overlook the fact that conditions in New York, and in a city the size of Rochester, are entirely different. Prices as high as $1 are obtained in New York, but that does not signify that any such scale would be profitable in Rochester.

As a matter of fact, the highest price obtained in this city at present is twenty-five cents. The house which sets that figure is the Gordon. It is understood that the management of that theatre has the subject in mind of advancing the prices, and it is rumored that when the new Hippodrome on East avenue is opened it will charge more than fifteen cents for its best seats.

Rochester is known as a low scale town, so far as prices are concerned, to the entire amusement world. Houses here do a better business at five and ten cents than they could by charging more, and the idea has been to build houses with large seating capacities and to fill them up.

Every exhibitor has a desire to show the best there is in the way of pictures, but they cannot afford to do so at the low prices which were established in the days of one-reel pictures.

Prices for films of that nature were much lower than they are for the big features, and if the higher priced films are to be shown, the patrons must pay for them.

Thus the exhibitor is torn between two desires, to show the best films, and to leave his prices at the low scale. It takes a man well versed in the show business indeed to know what to do.

A false step in that direction might ruin a good business, and that is why so many exhibitors stick to the old scale, and refuse to have anything to do with the big feature releases. They don't see their way clear to raise their admission prices, and they cannot show the good pictures without advancing them.

The most pronounced movement in the motion picture field in the last twelve months has been that which involved the production of five to eight reel features, reproductions of famous plays and books. The expense of these productions is so great that it is impossible to show them at the old prices, and, in marketing the feature films, the producers find themselves up against the objections of the exhibitors to raising prices.

The exhibitor feels that the patrons of his house are satisfied with programs composed of shorter films. "Let well enough alone," he figures, and as a result, where there is one house showing the high priced films, at advanced rates, there are dozens showing the shorter programs at the lower prices.

This is a problem which every exhibitor must figure out for himself, taking into consideration local conditions, his class of trade, location, etc., and it is a problem which cannot be settled in a minute. Up-State.

A Protest from the Audience

Editor, The Motion Picture News,
New York City:

Dear Sir.—This letter is a protest to the film manufacturers for their inattention to details of staging, characterization and costuming of the smaller one and two reel stories that make up the bulk of a picture show program.

These details of which I am complaining are small, almost inconsequential, but for the sake of greater pictorial truth and more convincing film portrayal the manufacturer should take as much pains in making a one or two reel as he would with the more stupendous and gigantic five and six part features.

Two instances to illustrate. In a thrilling newspaper story, a sporting editor is made to wear a black bow tie with a standing collar.

Imagine that! I have seen that kind of a tie worn by senatorial candidates, after dinner speakers and chautauqua lecturers but never by anyone you might expect to write a "corking" story of a baseball game or the slang of a boxing match.

Again, in a mountaineer story, the hillbilly wore trousers that were creased and around his neck was a white collar. Also imagine the infidelity of that character. The story painted him as a man who lived in utmost seclusion and ignorance, many miles from a backwoods town, yet he was dressed like a "city chap."

These films were put out by two of our best known producers. They were well acted, well staged and intensely interesting, but the "punch" of both stories faded away somehow in the consideration of those lapses of costumes.

Let's get our films absolutely true to life. Then they will call forth wider attention and consideration.

Chicago, Sept. 1, 1914.

Editor, The Motion Picture News,
New York City:

Dear Sir.—As you have always evinced a willingness to champion the well-founded opinions of exhibitors, I am prompted to call your attention to a condition that seems to be growing daily, viz., the staging by all film manufacturers of outrageously grewsome subjects, which run the gamut of crime in its most repellent form.

Particularly is this true in the great volume produced of sensationally colored, over-drawn, disgraceful, drinking scenes, which are shown in one form or another in almost every release.

In the four years past that I have been engaged in the picture business as an exhibitor, night after night I have heard exceptions taken by the audience as they left the theatre, to scenes of carousing shown in a picture.

As the photoplay houses of this country handle many thousands who enjoy their libations in a moderate way, and at the same time cater to women and children (being considered places of clean, innocent amusement) it would seem that the handful of manufacturers are subjecting the thousands of exhibitors throughout the country to unmerited criticism, which tends to the loss of patronage.

Now that the controversy between the total abstinence and the personal liberty factions has become so keen, the evils of such pictures are enhanced and the poor exhibitor (the middle man) is caught between two fires.

Trusting you will lend your weight in an endeavor to show the manufacturers the errors of their ways in allowing many so-called producers to air their superficial knowledge of bar room tactics to the detriment of the picture business in general, I remain,

Yours very truly,

W. M. Hight.

RENEW MUTUAL CONTRACT

The Mutual Film Corporation at its offices, 71 West Twenty-third street, on September 5, announced:

The existing arrangements of the Mutual Film Corporation and The New York Motion Picture Corporation for the marketing of Keystone, Broncho, Kay-Bee and Domino films, are to continue in the future as in the past. The renewal of the contract, which expired in August, has been the subject of much discussion ever since Messrs. Ince and Sennett came to New York six weeks ago. A renewal has been arranged on terms highly acceptable to all concerned.

The only alterations in the condition of the contract as applied to the Keystone brand are that every two weeks Keystone will put out a multiple in addition to the regular release.

Rochester Firm Ready With Four New Films

Educationals Include Care of the Teeth, the Latest Ideas in Farming and Rattlesnake Catching as an Industry

FOUR educationals of unusual interest have been released by the Rochester Motion Picture Company, Inc., Rochester, N. Y. The subjects cannot fail to attract attention wherever shown.

The first is "The Lineman," a film of 1,500 feet, showing and covering all the dangers that confront the electrical worker. During the making of this film many chances were taken, as parts were taken inside of power stations that were running full speed. A lineman makes a fall from the top of a 50-foot pole. Many scenes show the linemen at work on the tops of poles at dizzy heights.

"Oral Health," a film of 1,000 feet, shows the care and treatment of the teeth. During the action of this film mechanical devices are used to show teeth actually growing, and the things that happen during the process of growth; also a complete record of the methods employed in the public schools, and how at the free dispensaries the poorer class are carefully taken care of by expert dentists.

"The Rattlesnake Industry" is a film of 1,500 feet, covering the handling, catching, breeding, skinning and taking of the venom; the fats, the oils. These are all used by hundreds of hospitals all over the country to cure blood poison, etc. During the action of this film a man is shown actually bitten; it also shows cases at the time of poisoning and at the time of cure.

"Agriculture," a film of eight hundred feet, showing all the latest ideas in farming, including the use of dynamite.

Great Southern Film Company Engages Cast

Birmingham Firm Expects to Supply Big Demand for American Productions Because of Condition of Foreign Market

Birmingham, Sept. 10.

WITH the approaching completion of the organization of the Great Southern Film Manufacturing Company, headquarters and studios in Birmingham, this city, is soon expected to become a factor in the manufacture of motion picture films.

On account of the European war situation, which the men backing the local manufacturing project claim will cut off the supply of all foreign manufacturers and create an enormous demand for American-made films.

The officers of the concern have just been announced as follows: A. Alex Wall, Birmingham motion picture theatre owner and operator, president; Dr. R. J. Strickland and A. A. Bruner, vice-presidents; C. H. Glasser, secretary and treasurer; Judge Alvin M. Douglas, counsel.

President Wall has just announced that arrangements have been completed with Alfred Hollingsworth.

Alma Russell has been engaged as the leading lady and other members of the company are announced as Mr. Macklen, Rus Smith, Joe Bennett, Miss Blasdell, Dick Foster, assistant director.

How Exhibitors Advertise

LIVENING THE DULL NIGHT

"THE biggest pay-roll in town." That is the sign on a streamer which flaunts across the entire front of E. W. Jackson's Family Theatre in St. Bernard, O., every Thursday evening. Incidentally, Thursday some time ago was Jackson's jinx night. It is not a jinx any more.

By giving away a total of $14, Jackson fills his house with friendly patrons on Thursday night and stimulates a desire for attendance at the next Thursday evening's performance. When the patrons enter his theatre on Thursday evening Mr. Jackson personally presides over a huge box which contains 731 envelopes of the pay-roll size. Each patron is allowed to select any envelope in the box.

Seven hundred of these envelopes contain one penny each; one of them contains a $5 bill; twenty of them contain nickels and ten of them dimes. Every person who pays an admission to enter the theatre therefore is presented with money. It is in truth the largest pay-roll in town—in point of numbers and it has gained great popularity for the Family.

CAPACITY BY BILLBOARD ADVERTISING

NAT. B. SMITH, manager of the U. S. Roof Garden Theatre, at 51-53 Broad street, Elizabeth, N. J., is a firm believer in the power of billboard advertising for the motion picture house. When "The Christian" and "Neptune's Daughter" were the attractions at his house, both were liberally advertised through the billposters, and as a result they drew packed houses. On the two following nights the theatre was so well filled that the sale of tickets had to be stopped.

For "The Christian," four twenty-four sheets, ten sixes, ten threes and fifty ones were used, and for the Kellerman picture, ten twenty-fours, twenty eights, seventeen threes, and fifty ones.

Although the Garden Theatre was only recently completed, extensive alterations are already being planned to it. The theatre now consists of an auditorium and a roof garden. The roof garden, as it now is, cannot be used in the winter, but the business of the house makes it necessary to have a greater seating capacity than the auditorium affords.

Plans are being made to enclose the roof garden for the winter and put a portable roof on it. The sides will be of glass. Opera chairs will be installed, replacing the summer lawn benches and a new Wurlitzer will be installed. Elevators will be put in to carry patrons from the ground floor to the roof.

The improvements will be commenced within a week or two and will be completed about the last of October. They will cost in the neighborhood of $25,000.

GETTING AWAY FROM POSTERS

A TENDENCY is being evidenced by the larger houses of Kansas City and thereabouts to reduce the use of advertising sheets for lobby displays. Players' photographs in small frames and a limited employment of one-sheets is becoming the rule. The new Royal Theatre here, the largest and most up-to-date of the down-town houses, absolutely refuses to use any posters whatsoever, contenting its display to four small frames showing photographs of the players taking part in the daily program.

Joe Stiebel, owner of the Apollo, one of the better known residence district houses, also has announced that he will pursue a similar policy when his theatre is opened this fall.

The Tenth Street Theatre limits itself to photographs and one-sheets with the exception of one larger poster placed on a side wall of the lobby. The managers of the Willis Wood Theatre, now being converted from a "legit" house to a picture theatre, expect to use no lobby display other than an electric sign over the entrance, emblazoning in large letters the name of the offering.

The Wonderland Theatre, which has been remodeled and its lobby increased twelve feet in width, also is eliminating the huge posters. It has also been learned that P. J. Concannon will use nothing larger than one-sheets in the lobby of his Electric Theatre in Emporia.

"The day of the flaring, glaring nickelodeon front is passing," one exchange man here remarked recently. "The keynote of the more profitable houses of today is refinement in display. The house that is doing good business presents a clean, well toned front and not a hodge-podge of shrieking paper."

It is noticeable that most of the theatres mentioned above have terra cotta and tile white or brown front lobbies.

SOMETHING FOR PATRONS TO KEEP

A LIVE wire exhibitor in Bethlehem, Pa., Harold W. Heiberger, manager of the Lehigh-Orpheum, is using successfully a doorknob hanger. It consists of a slip of heavy pasteboard and a cord run through a hole at the top for hanging it on a nail or doorknob for future reference.

A recent one, printed in blue ink with a neat border, contains a program of the coming attractions at the theatre. The number of reels patrons can expect each day are indicated at the top, then follows a list of special pictures to appear for the next seven days.

Besides the dates of the films, the prices and the stars in each picture are generally mentioned.

The hanger is an excellent idea, for patrons are induced by its attractiveness to save it for the future.

The same manager issues a house organ advertising the coming attraction as in the case of the hanger. It is full of bright, interesting bits of film news likely to appeal to the general public.

In addition to this there is an insert, consisting of an illustrated herald, announcing the future date of an important film attraction and furnished to the theatre management by the producing company. A number of local business houses carry advertisements.

PROTECTS FRAMES WITH WIRE

LIKE many other exhibitors, Manager Schoenlober of the Violet Theatre, W. 24th and Violet streets, Milwaukee, has been having his troubles keeping his three and six sheets looking neat. If he used glass frames to cover them, the glass was always being broken and if he did not frame them they looked untidy and become torn. He has finally hit upon a scheme which, though very inexpensive, keeps the paper neat and untorn.

Removing the glass from his frames he substituted common ordinary chicken wire. The wire holds the paper in place and does not interfere with the legibility of the poster. It does away with all the bother of washing that the glass frames necessitated and, of course, the wire frames are not liable to be broken.

KELLERMAN WAR ZONE HOUSE RAZED

In a special despatch relayed from Ostend to the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, it was stated that the home of Annette Kellerman (Mrs. James R. Sullivan), who created an unprecedented success in the picture entitled "Neptune's Daughter," has been razed in order to make way for the fortresses located in the environs of Paris.

Miss Kellerman's house is located at 14 Avenue De Cheminde Fer, Rueil, Siene et Oise, France. This is a suburb of Paris located about twenty miles outside of the city proper and is directly in line of Fort No. 40. As instructions have been given to remove all obstacles in the range of the big guns of these forts, Miss Kellerman was forced to abandon her residence last Thursday in order that the same could be razed. Miss Kellerman is at present in Paris.

FREE CIVIC FILMS FOR THE ASKING

Billings, Mont., Sept. 9.

Billings, not content with a city bathing pool which attracts hundreds to its cool waters daily, has had its attractions "filmed" and will send the reels over the state and without the state to advertise the city.

The films were shown last week at the Luna Theatre, Billings, for the first time. They were taken by a Spokane company.

The natatorium is one of the largest in the inland Northwest, and city officials believe the motion pictures will attract favorable attention to Billings wherever shown. The project is being financed from the city treasury, and the films will be offered free to any exhibitor who will show them in connection with his regular program.

WILL SUPPLY SCHOOLS WITH PROJECTORS

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Kansas City, Mo., Sept. 10.

A company is being formed here to sell projecting machines and educational films to schools, homes, churches, library institutions, women's clubs and similar associations.

The details of the organization have not been announced, but its formation here follows a two weeks' demonstration of the Patheoscope, the home projecting machine sold by the Pathé company, by Mrs. Emma L. McCleland, a representative of the company. Mrs. McCleland has interested the local school board in the use of the machines here.

The company probably will handle cameras and raw film stock as well as the projection machines and the regular film service.

Exhibitors Sound Sunday Show Sentiment

In Omaha Territory, They Beg Exchanges for Programs That Won't Offend the Most Prudish—Puritans Were Conquered in One Town

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Omaha, Neb., Sept. 9.

THROUGHOUT the territory of which Omaha is the recognized center—Nebraska, Iowa, Kansas and the Dakotas—there is trouble in the smaller towns over Sunday closing. During the summer the exhibitors in a number of the villages have remained closed Sunday without objection, but since the fall business is livening up and every day lost marks a financial decrease, there has been a discontent.

Many exhibitors have tried to put on Sunday shows that will meet with the approval of those who have been objecting. Take, for example, John J. Homan, proprietor of the "Mystic" at Alton, Ia. He called on Manager Fred Van Husan of the Laemmle company the other day and almost pleaded for such a service.

"I want something almost religious, something that carries a good moral lesson," he said, "and I want some good, wholesome comedy."

"Why, we have lots of that," said Van Husan.

"You don't understand," said Homan, "I want something entertaining, but it must be strictly clean. Not even any kissing. No hugging. All black, quiet dresses. Something no one, no matter how prudish, can object to."

"Oh-h-h," said Van Husan, "I don't know about that, John. We'll do the best we can, though." Then Van Husan remarked that such requests were becoming more and more frequent.

Over at Rock Rapids, Ia., there has been a long drawn out fight over Sunday closing. The exhibitors have tried the quietest kind of pictures, but the minute anything that even suggested only a kiss appeared, there was a storm of criticism that the poor exhibitor had to bow before.

If they can get the right kind of pictures—old maidenish pictures, if you please—the exhibitors think they can gradually educate their critical audiences up to the proper attitude. In the small villages there is no entertainment during the long winter afternoons unless the motion picture houses are running. There are no theatres. Many of the farmers depend upon Saturday nights and Sundays in which to seek such entertainment. But they are not enthusiastic enough to support the exhibitors in the face of puritan criticism.

Many Kansas towns are also complaining. Out in Nebraska any number of small towns have tried almost everything to get to run on Sunday. A few exhibitors have tried it in spite of the criticism, to go under in disgrace. One or two, according to general reports, have won out.

One remedy is that suggested by some of the troubled exhibitors. Get the right kind of pictures—educational, travel, religious or news pictures—and keep showing them, every once in a while slipping in a quiet little comedy or a clean little picture with a good lesson, until the town public comes to view the exhibitor as he should be viewed—some one with the best wishes of the community at heart.

At Sheldon, Ia., another plan was found to be a success. Several exhibitors there had tried all kinds of plans to get around the objections to Sunday shows. But when one show would try it the public, influenced by a sermon or other wave of public sentiment, would desert it for the others.

Finally, after all had suffered, they did the only possible thing. They got together. Then they began putting on clean, proper, educational, interesting Sunday shows. Now they are enjoying good business, all are prospering, and they are working hand in hand with the element which objected to the open Sunday.

This, as you see, is just another lesson on "getting together."

EDUCATIONAL FILMS ONLY

Los Angeles, Sept. 7.

The Mozart Theatre, for several seasons home of grand opera in Los Angeles, later used for stock company productions, will be opened in September with a motion picture program. The present lease expires September 7, and at that time Edward Mozart, a former lessee of the house, will again take charge of it. It is the plan of Mr. Mozart to show only educational pictures.

The theatre has a seating capacity of 1,500 and is one of the best equipped theatres in the West. It is located three blocks from the center of the shopping district on a side street, and for this reason has never proven a paying house.

TWO AMERICAN PLAYERS GET LIVELY SEND-OFF

Olive Templeton and Florence Short, who have been working in a special feature since the first week in July under the direction of Thomas Ricketts of the American Film Company, were given an impromptu farewell by a number of the members of that company recently.

Miss Short will remain in Los Angeles for a short time, while Miss Templeton proceeded directly to her home in Maine.

The Privilege of Being Taxed

THE latest news of interest to the trade from Washington is that the motion picture industry is about to be vested with the honor of contributing to the $100,000,000 fund which President Wilson has asked Congress to raise.

This is a proof of the growth and prosperity of the industry that ought to be substantial enough to silence the professional pessimists who predict the speedy death of what they term "the movie craze."

IT demonstrates, at any rate, that the motion picture business is no longer an "infant industry."

Incidentally, it may remind the motion picture manufacturer that it would be as well for him if his business were in the class of those infant industries which maintain a Congressional guardian "ad litem" or two at the capital to see that nobody takes advantage of their youth.

THE proposition to tax motion picture films for the purpose of raising war revenue is a caustic comment on the lack of efficient organization in any part of this field.

Take note that no opposition was raised when a member of the Ways and Means Committee of the House suggested that it would not be amiss to tax motion pictures. Who was there, indeed, to raise any opposition? And why should any opposition be raised?

Somebody must be taxed, if the $100,000,000 is to be forthcoming. Obviously it couldn't be the railroads, nor the oil and gasoline people, nor the tobacco manufacturers, nor any of a score of other industrial groups who are officially immune from all such vulgar proceedings.

AND so, after casting around for suitable victims, it was decided to call upon the industry whose manufacturers had rather proudly declared before a Congressional committee not long ago that their profits aggregated 110 per cent.

It is frankly acknowledged around Washington that the motion picture business has been singled out for taxation because of the highly colored stories of the profits that were being realized every year.

The member who proposed the taxation of films, in fact, cited the report of the trust investigating committee, in which film manufacturers were quoted as placing their profits at more than 100 per cent.

IT is said that the proposal to tax gasoline was abandoned because "it would arouse the wrath of the farmers using it for farm machinery."

A similar attempt to tax railroad tickets was frustrated with the explanation that "it would arouse a feeling of resentment in the hearts of the traveling public against the administration."

THAT the photoplay-loving public, which is several times as large as the gasoline-using public, and comparable in numbers to the traveling public, would object to paying the tax on theatre tickets did not occur to the committee.

And, after all, why should it?

There were no lobbyists on hand to remind them of it, and Congressmen are busy men with a great many things on their minds.

ONE thing more.

The tax will take one of two forms. Either it will be a tax on films, or a tax on theatre tickets.

Does it need to be said that the exhibitor will pay, in either case?

If theatre tickets are taxed, he will pay the government.

If films are taxed he will pay the manufacturer.

But he will pay. Don't forget that.

AND, on the whole, if the exhibitor and the manufacturer are not wise enough to protect themselves as the members of other industries do, they can at least have the consolation of knowing that they have supported their country out of their pockets like true patriots—if there is any consolation in that knowledge.

In the proposed tax is a lesson for dilatory exhibitors who have been indifferent to the benefits of a national association. Here certainly is a case where a strong organization could wield telling influence for its members against an unjust and discriminating piece of legislation.

Coining Dimes Out of Heart-Interest

By R. H. GORE

Charley Sweeton, Whose Introduction to Filmdom Consisted in Visiting a Motion Picture House to Get in Out of the Rain, Now Draws Crowds That Do Not Consider His Theatre a Rainy-Day Refuge—His Rules for Success

MAKING motion pictures pay in the big houses where the recognized theatrical attractions have fizzled out is the specialty of Charley Sweeton, of Evansville, Ind.

Charley got the hunch along in the early years of 1900, when he stumbled into a small picture show one night to get away from the cold. He was then an usher in one of the big theatres of Evansville.

That night he failed to sleep. He was thinking of the day when he would put pictures into Evansville's largest theatres and keep them open the year around. Now he has two of them operating in addition to smaller houses. Sweeton was still manager of the Jake Wells houses when the Orpheum began to fail to make proper returns as a vaudeville and single-act house.

"I CAN make motion pictures pay in that house," he told Jake Wells, his employer.

There was enthusiasm in the youthful face, but Jake Wells couldn't see the same possibilities of the screen plays.

"Lease it," said Wells.

"I'll do it," said Sweeton.

Next week the policy of the Orpheum was changed. Pictures went on where individuals had amused the crowds before.

There was a falling off of attendance. The older theatrical men took Charley Sweeton aside and told him that he should have asked their advice and warned him against future rashness.

"It's a bad proposition," they said.

THE younger man shook his head. He went home to his wife and he talked with her. She shared his confidence and his enthusiasm.

"There must be something that will get your crowds," she said.

He thought for a long time.

"There is that something that makes anything go, and I'll find out what I need behind the Orpheum," he said doggedly.

The next day he met a newspaperman, a personal friend. They talked about his venture.

"You can make anything pay," the other said, "if you will adopt some policy and stick to it. We publish our newspaper for the workingman. We don't give a continental about the rich man nor the society buds. We go in for those who toil, and it pays."

CHARLEY SWEETON saw the necessity for an objective point. That night he formulated a motto: "Some men have money, some have brains, but all have hearts." And then he knew what course he would pursue. He picked the picture that had heart appeal. He went strong after human-interest. He studied psychology. He was confident that his idea would build his theatre. Then he hit upon another idea.

"Get the whole town to working for you. The workers that don't cost anything are the best kind," he argued. He set to work to formulate a program. It looked like this:

The Theatre—A place to appeal to the heart and mind of people.

Plan—Presentation of impelling pictures.

Audience—Analysis of their likes and dislikes.

A—Regulating character of pictures.

B—Steadiness of purpose.

C—Efficiency in presentation.

D—Developing a character for the house.

HIS house paid. He has recently taken over the $100,000 Majestic for picture purposes.

THE company a house draws is an important consideration.

"I do not appeal to the highbrows," he said. "They are too few. But I do appeal to the great mass of common people. It's not only a business proposition. It's human. It gives me pleasure to educate them to meet problems.

"I am loyal to the newspapers. I discriminate in placing my copy, however. I use the newspapers that are liked by the people who attend my theatre—the 'lower crust' population as distinguished from the 'upper crust.'"

And Sweeton is able to do almost as much at his Orpheum Theatre for a charity fund as any of the newspapers.

Motion Picture Part of Club Entertainment

Edward King, of Titan, Hits Upon Novel Method of Entertaining His Guests—Fine Film Shown at Rowayton, Conn.

THE motion picture has found a new field for giving pleasure. Besides entertaining thousands in its regular homes every day, it has often added pleasing novelty to the monotony of church fairs and school entertainments. And now it takes its place with opera singers and skilled magicians on the program of a social club's festivities. The occasion for this unusual use of the film and screen was a gathering of the members of the Tokeneke Country Club. Rowayton, Conn., on Friday evening, August 28.

Edward King, of the Titan Film Corporation, hit upon this novel way of surprising his fellow members. This company has just secured the American rights to exhibit "The Heir of the Lagarderes," a five-part drama that was made in Europe. Accordingly, he arranged to show this splendid example of the producer's art in the comfortable reception room of the clubhouse, while the club members lounged about in the easy chairs.

The picture, which all of those present heartily enjoyed, was preceded and followed by songs and recitals by David Bispham, the singer. He rendered four or five short pieces previous to the showing of the picture, and afterwards recited and sang "King Robert of Sicily," one of his well-known successes.

Altogether the evening passed away with great success, although Mr. King had more than enough trouble with the installation of the machine and the working of the electricity, which was for a time cut off.

Because of the disagreeable night, not as many attended as were provided for, but there were still quite a few seated in the comfortable club room when Mr. Bispham began his recital. All those who were present admired the picture which has been reviewed in this paper.

NEW KLEINE FEATURE READY SOON

A five-part picture entitled "The Woman Who Dared" is soon to be released by George Kleine, through his branch offices. The feature of the production is a sensational race between an automobile and a passenger train. Many glimpses of circus life are also portrayed.

Directory of New Theatres

EDITOR'S NOTE.—The information contained in the "Directory of New Theatres" is gathered by the field representatives of "The Motion Picture News" and the facts and figures in each instance have been verified by them and are authentic. They may be relied upon by members of the trade.

"THE REEL SHOW" OPENS

A MOST attractive theatre has opened on Ninth street, in Cleveland, under the display sign "The Reel Show." It is one of the smallest of the Cleveland motion picture houses, but it is also one of the most richly furnished and elaborately equipped houses in the city.

The house is owned by G. W. Hausheer. It is managed by M. B. Goren. Mr. Hausheer has spared no expense on the building.

A front of genuine California onyx is one of the principal claims to distinction made by the Reel.

Another feature of the exterior is the arrangement of the heavy plate glass windows, permitting a view from the street of the interior of the theatre.

The theatre is equipped with two Power No. 6 machines. A mirror screen of the best quality is used. An American Fotoplayer, a self-contained orchestra, furnishes the music. First releases of the Mutual program are shown.

NASHVILLE TO HAVE ANOTHER THEATRE

AN addition to the amusement features of Nashville, Tenn., is a new motion picture being installed by the Crescent Amusement Company at 217 Fifth avenue, north, the building formerly occupied by M. Skalowski. The permit calls for an expenditure of $20,000 and is in conformity with the new city laws for the construction of motion picture houses.

The curtain will be in the front of the house, the floors will be fireproof, and a fireproof partition wall will be built between the machine room and the auditorium. Other requirements being complied with are for a building 25 feet or more in width and a ceiling with proportionate height. The seating capacity of the theatre will be about 500.

The new theatre will be under the management of the Crescent Amusement Company, which has established a reputation for programs and films of excellent artistic character.

RIVERSIDE HOUSE READY IN OCTOBER

THE Owl Theatre, owned and managed by the firm of Howe & Merrill, at Riverside, Cal., will be opened about October 15. Originally it was intended to spend about $25,000 on the construction and furnishing of the theatre, but it is estimated now that the total cost will be in the neighborhood of $40,000. The theatre will be fitted with a very complete ventilating system, which will wash the air of the theatre every three minutes. There will be 850 seats, including twelve boxes containing six seats, each of which will sell for one dollar. The regular prices will be ten and fifteen cents. The owners have arranged for rest and smoking rooms, and will give their patrons every comfort. It is the intention to use multiple reel features two and probably three days each week.

THREE HOUSES UNDER WAY IN NORTH MICHIGAN

THE Delft Theatre Company, Inc., N. W. Jopling, president; A. O. Jopling, vice-president, and H. S. Gallop, general manager, are building a new house at Escanaba, Mich. The seating capacity will be 800, the decorations in the old German fashion, with seats upholstered in blue velour or plush. A large balcony, large stage, steam heat and floor ventilation with air taken from roof will be other features.

The same people are building a new house at Munising, Mich., which will seat 500. They are building a third house at Marquette, where they now control the opera house and Grand Theatre.

These new houses will open about December 1, and each one will be named the Delft Theatre.

FRESNO THEATRE WILL COST $80,000

A THEATRE and office building to cost $80,000 is being erected at Fresno, Cal., by T. C. White, the location being on I street. The theatre will be used for road shows and large moving picture attractions, and will seat fifteen hundred persons.

THEATRES HERE AND THERE

LOUIS HEPPINGER, of Clairton, is looking the ground over at Washington and Carrick, Pa., as he contemplates erecting a motion picture theatre in some town in this section. He is one of the up-to-date managers and believes in a first-class show.

The Empress Theatre at Harlan, Ia., will be opened soon. It is a new building and seats over 500.

R. A. Cator recently opened a new Airdome at Twenty-first street and Avenue F, Council Bluffs, Ia.

Bids for the construction of a motion picture theatre to be constructed on Chelsea avenue, near Sixth street, Dayton, O., by the American Photoplay Theatres Company, have been opened in the office of Hanker & Cairns, architects. The theatre will cost approximately $35,000.

Robert J. Kitts has completed plans and specifications for the one-story brick motion picture theatre and store building to be built on Brand boulevard. Glendale, Calif., for Henry C. Jensen. It will contain two store rooms and a theatre auditorium to seat about 900. The cost will be about $25,000.

Tamaqua, Pa., will have a new motion picture theatre in the near future. according to an announcement made this week. A number of Tamaqua capitalists are behind the proposition. The new house will cost $60,000 and will seat 1,200 persons. The screen will be 21 by 16 in dimensions.

Shickshinny, a town a few miles from Wilkes-Barre, Pa., will boast of an up-to-date motion picture theatre when William Dillon opens his house now under course of construction. The new theatre will seat 600 persons and will cost about $20,000 to build.

NEW KLEINE FEATURE SOON

George Kleine will soon release a four-reel subject under the title "Bartered Lives," in which the European actress Miss Hesperia is featured in a dual role. Miss Hesperia recently captured first prize in the European contest for the most popular motion picture actress.

"WHEN WE WERE YOUNG"

(Miller Brothers—Warners—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"WHEN We Were Young" is a picture the action of which transpires in the time when the West was young, and is a story in which the marauding redskins and the stanch United States troops play important parts with the latter, at last getting the upper hand, but only after a great and absorbing struggle.

It is in such pictures as these that the Miller brothers excel. They have the facilities, the men, the Indians, and the locale all ready at their beck and call, so that when one knows that he is going to see a Western melodrama put out by this company, he knows that he is going to see some of the best that this class of entertainment offers.

But aside from being a picture of this sort, this production boasts of something quite new and out of line from the ordinary picture in which the Indians and troops are the main attractions. The exciting spectacle of the Indians laying siege to the troops who are encamped on a small island in the middle of a river is this new scene. And after many days the soldiers are finally rescued by another company, which was brought to the scene by one who had escaped from the island and who had managed to evade the Indians.

By this act he proves his worth and claims the right to ask for the hand of the Lieutenant's daughter, which before had been refused him, because he was suspected of dishonesty; but his name is also cleared by the confession of the real culprit, and all ends well.

The picture is in the form of a vision coming to the old couple who live over these days when the whites held a footing in the wild West which was none too sure. Perhaps the story could be made a little clearer by the addition of a subtitle here and there, but as it stands it is a fine picture, a fine Western, and one to be enjoyed.

"THE VIRGINIAN"

(Lasky—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THOSE who have enjoyed Owen Wister's novel, "The Virginian," and there are many who have, will most certainly realize that it was no easy matter to transform it into a motion picture, even with the added resources of the play by Kirk La Shelle to draw from. To realize the scenes laid in the West in the time when that country was truly worthy the adjective "wild," was perhaps not such a difficult proposition, but to give a correct portrayal of the characters must have presented great difficulties to both the director and the principals of the cast. That they have accomplished this in "Lasky" style is a deserving success.

To him who goes to see the picture with the memories of the book fresh in his mind, it will be obvious that the director had in mind Owen Wister's wonderful descriptions of certain scenes. The great expanse of uncultivated land, the wounded Virginian lying unconscious by the brook, and Molly supporting him to her home, the death of Trampas effected by the Virginian and countless others, are all scenes which seem to be lifted from the book and placed in the picture, so accurate are they and so correct in every detail.

THE THIEVES BELIEVE THEY ARE SAFE.

Beautiful light effects and excellent photography throughout stamp the picture as technically perfect. It would not have been allowed the director to show the actual hanging of Steve and the other cattle thief, so he has introduced the novel idea of showing the shadows of the two men, which create a solemn impression besides giving the same effect which the actual bodies would have, only leaving out some of the gruesomeness.

Dustin Farnum gives a clear characterization of the Virginian, the daring and free man of the early West. In less accomplished hands than his the part could have either been overacted or the reverse, but as he interprets the role, he seems all that we thought the man was. Winifred Kingston as Molly Wood, the New England school teacher, whose advent into the West considerably changes her character and ideas, and her heart too, which is finally won by the Virginian, is well cast.

Billy Elmer as Trampas, the heavy of the tale, J. W. Johnston as Steve, Sidney Deane as Uncle Hughey, Tex Driscoll as Shorty, James Griswold as the stage driver, and H. B. Carpenter as Spanish Ed complete the cast. They are all possessed with a perfect understanding of their parts.

Well established is the fact that the picture is better than the play, but as the story is taken from the book as well, much, of course, had to be left out, and for this reason those who have read the book will perhaps enjoy it more than those who have not, as they will be able to supplement the picture with their own knowledge of the story.

On the other hand, those who have not read the book will enjoy it fully, as they will not be able to detect the omissions. Taking both these sides of the matter into consideration, it is safe to say that the production will be greatly appreciated by all who are fortunate enough to see it, on the first side because of their further knowledge and on the other because they see only the story as it is put before them.

WHEELING THEATRE BURNS DOWN

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Wheeling, W. Va., Sept. 10.

The Orpheum Theatre at Wheeling, W. Va., was burned to the ground this week with a total loss of $50,000 to the building and contents. The theatre is located at Market and Fourteenth streets, and was bought by George Shafer.

"THE HIGHER LAW"

(101 Bison-Universal—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

PICK a hundred men out of an average crowd and ask them what kind of a man Louis XI of France was and ninety-nine will be at a loss for an answer; send them to see any installment of the Universal's Francois Villon series in which that character is impersonated by D. C. Crane and they will come away possessing a correct interpretation of his character.

But this is not all they will glean from "The Higher Law." An excellently produced and absorbing tale is set before the observer in these two reels, so absorbing for the simple reason that it is quite new, and yet alive with action and intrigue, that the two thousand feet will have passed before one is aware of the fact.

VILLON IN THE ENGLISH INN.

The director, Charles Giblyn, has proven himself worthy of great praise. The old costumes and castles, the jovialty of the tap-room, the dignified and stately action of the court followers, all lend a decidedly mediaeval atmosphere to the picture, besides proving that great pains were taken in the producing of each scene.

Francois Villon, impersonated by Murdock MacQuarrie, is the central figure of the series, each chapter of which is a separate tale. This picture is the second of the series. Mr. MacQuarrie does excellent work in the role of the man, who is at once the servant and master of his king, who at one moment appears as pious as a monk and the next as authoritative as his lord, but always scheming and plotting to further the king's power and correspondingly his own.

The original of these pictures are now being run in the Century Magazine by George Bronson Howard.

But the picture does not rely solely on its meritorious costumes and atmosphere for success. There is sufficient scheming, brawls, duel scenes and the like to appease the appetites of the keen lovers of sensationalism, and those who would not be content with the great character study that the picture offers.

"ADVENTURES IN DIPLOMACY"

(Eclair-Universal—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE Eclair Film Company have taken advantage and have seen the excellent motion picture possibilities lying in "Elusive Isabel," a story written by the late Jacques Futrelle, which was recently published in serial form in the Saturday Evening Post, and have accordingly secured the rights and produced it as a motion picture in six reels and two parts. The first part, "Adventures in Diplomacy," is released September 16, the second part, called "For the Mastery of the World," will be released at some later date.

It is a strong picture, a well acted picture, and possessed with the power to hold the attention of those who witness it throughout. One remarkably strong point in its favor is the excellent light effects which are noticeable from beginning to end, which create a fine effect and instill even more interest into the spectators.

A number of Eclair stars ably interpret the leading characters in the story. Alec B. Francis appears as Grimm the detective, who is on the track of a group of foreign spies, led by Rosa Morini, Belle Adair and her brother, E. Roseman. The Venezuelan ambassador and his accomplice are played by Fred Truesdale and J. Lindsey Hall, respectively.

Perhaps there are a few details of the picture that could be improved upon. The addition of a few subtitles in a number of places would make the story clearer. Quite a little of the story is left to the imagination until the final scenes, where it is entirely cleared up. But this may not be considered a fault by some, as leaving a few of the events to be explained by the last scenes, materially heightens the interest.

The photography, as in all pictures released by Eclair, is of the best variety and the sets are most gorgeous.

The story deals with the efforts of a band of foreign spies to obtain a treaty involving the affairs of Venezuela and Mexico, which is in the possession of the Venezuelan ambassador. All of their carefully laid plans are successful until the final step is reached, when they are discovered by a detective. The prince is made a prisoner, and the girl is set upon the right road.

PATHÉ FRENCH STUDIOS STILL PRODUCING

Word has been received by the American offices of Pathé Freres that the French studios of the company are still producing negatives, despite the war. There is a sufficient number of actors who are exempt from military service to insure a steady supply of good pictures.

In addition to this there was a good stock of unreleased pictures on hand when the war broke out, sufficient in itself to meet the requirements of the American market for a considerable length of time. Altogether the feeling in the American offices of the French concern is one of optimism.

"THE UNWELCOME MRS. HATCH"

(Famous Players—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

THOSE persons who go to see "The Unwelcome Mrs. Hatch," by Mrs. Burton Harrison, will find a welcome relief from the sameness and the crudeness and the obviousness that too often, alas, are found in motion pictures. This is a superior production, and it will be encouraging to the firm and steadfast believers in the future of the picture play as a substitute for regular plays.

We cannot have too many films of this character. The public is always ready to accord such picture a hearty welcome.

AFTER TWENTY YEARS OF SEPARATION

It certainly does all that could be asked, and even as much as the stage version of the same play did, and this without depending on action to carry it through. For, in reality, there is very little action in the entire four reels, but there is development and this is the important thing after all.

The story never drags, it moves forward continuously, but the progress is in the interplay of characters upon each other.

Now the great difficulty in a picture of this kind is in making it comprehensible without overloading it with sub-titles. This difficulty has been met and overcome by casting in the several parts players of rare intelligence and grasp, who never fail to make the spectator understand their feelings and the thoughts, and yet can never express them by word of mouth. When the whole power of the play lies in the emotional clash of characters the highest order of histrionic ability is required to reveal this on the screen.

But not a point is missed, and the credit for the achievement belongs to the players. First and foremost is Henrietta Crosman, who makes her initial appearance in pictures. But her long experience as an emotional actress fits her eminently to delineate the character of the wife who is divorced and comes back to see the daughter that has been taken away from her.

She is really superb in the quiet restraint and the calm, dignity with which she plays a part that a lesser actress would have been sorely tempted to clothe with fierce and fiery outbursts of indignation and tears of righteous sorrow. But Miss Crosman's understanding is too fine to give vent to such melodramatic methods, and she is justified because she succeeds in making the character perfectly intelligible.

Following Miss Crosman's lead, the other players are always carefully restrained, never violent or stormy, even in the most tense and dramatic moments of the play.

In fact the play moves with this quiet dignity that is entirely at variance with the feelings of the characters, and yet is entirely in keeping with the air of good breeding that pervades the home from which the first wife is forced by the actions of a loveless husband.

"THE PAWN OF FORTUNE"

(Eclectic—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

REPLETE with dramatic and intense situations that are interpreted with virile power by an intelligent cast of players, the five-part drama, "The Pawn of Fortune," makes a direct appeal to that large body of theater-goers who like above all else plot, and plot with suspense and surprise.

These absolutely necessary elements for arousing and maintaining interest are here in abundance, and contribute more than anything else to the success of the picture. But other characteristics of a well-produced photoplay are here besides an entertaining and well-constructed story.

The acting is fully adequate to the demands made upon the players, and serves to give a clear and well-defined characterization to the persons concerned, and in consequence there is no danger of the audience misunderstanding or failing to grasp the story, even in the smallest details.

Furthermore, the settings are substantial and solid, without the least appearance of being makeshift. In the factory and laboratory everything seems genuine, and when we are shown the interiors of the homes of people of affluence, the furnishings and the decorations are entirely characteristic. At one point in the story it is necessary to present scenes in foreign lands, because the hero is forced to leave home, and he spends several years in wandering in strange and distant places, on one occasion falling in with a cannibal tribe. Here the absolute fidelity of the producer is almost terrifying.

The story concerns an inventive genius, Hadley, who arouses the jealousy of the young owner of the manufactory for which he works. He marries the woman, but later has to go on this frightful journey, far from his wife and child.

JANET'S INVENTION UNLOCKS THE SAFE

The child is lost and is brought up by the leader of a gang of criminals as his daughter. The mother becomes a trained nurse. When the husband finally gets back, he finds his wife, but they search in vain for the daughter.

But she sooner or later turns up in the home of her own parents, being engaged as a governess for their adopted daughter, but after an exciting flight from a detective, who had trailed her from a robbery, in which she had innocently lent her services and a machine which she had invented for opening safes.

Janet is a new character in film drama, and possibly in fiction. The ability to invent mechanical devices is not usually considered a feminine trait. Woman's absolute lack of comprehension of machinery is proverbial, almost beyond the belief of masculine minds.

"THE MILLION DOLLAR MYSTERY"

(Thanhouser—Twelfth Episode)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

SINCE the first few episodes of the "Million Dollar Mystery" we have seen or heard little of the million dollars. When last it was shown on the screen it was cast to the bottom of the sea by the butler, where it has remained up to the present installment.

Now it is brought up by the anchor of a ship, discovered by a sailor, and concealed by him until the vessel reaches port. Here he attempts to disembark with it, but is met by the captain, and a struggle ensues in which the box is again thrown overboard.

Jackson, the conspirator, learns of this fact by overhearing one of the men talking of it in a cafe, and a member of "The Black Hundred" is sent to regain it. He employs a negro to dive for it and he may be seen at the bottom of the ocean, finally reaching the box and bringing it to the surface.

It is then conveyed to the secret rooms of the Black Hundred, where, when the conspirators are about to open it, the lights are turned out by the butler and Jim, who gained admittance to the meeting by attacking Jackson and stealing his secret code. In the confusion that reigns, while the room is in darkness, they manage to escape with the box, leaving the conspirators astounded at its disappearance, and the mystified spectators still at a loss as to whether the box contains the million dollars or not.

An atmosphere of mystery pervades the entire two reels of this episode, which will most certainly set the spectator to wondering what the ultimate outcome of the whole story will be.

An unknown person is introduced in this chapter, mystifying the audience still more; he is to be seen conversing with the butler, whom he closely resembles.

Braine also sees this man and is just about to shoot him when he is shot by Flo, disabling his hand. She then inquires of the butler who this strange person is, but he will not disclose the man's identity, leaving Florence and the entire audience in a quandary as to who the gentleman may be and what his business is with the butler of the Hargreaves house.

The episode closes when an unknown hand is shown dropping the treasure box down a well. Only the hand of the person who is executing this deed is visible, and this hand affords plenty material for speculation on whom it belongs to; for instance, if its owner is the mysterious individual who was earlier talking with the butler.

The film will undoubtedly make a hit, it has so many attractive qualities. The name "Million Dollar Mystery" has a catchy sound and was a wise selection for a title. The popularity of the picture justifies it.

"THE PERILS OF PAULINE"

(Eclectic—Thirteenth Episode)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE twelve preceding episodes of this serial have afforded its followers many a thrill, and have provided them with many a sensational scene, but it is safe to say that none of them could boast of such a variety of excitement that appears in this, the thirteenth episode. It is a certainty that such a series of scenes have never been enjoyed by the public as yet.

THE PARTY LEARNS OF THE LOVERS' ESCAPE.

A startling steeplechase race is the thrill which is the big event of this installment, and it is a real race, not played especially for the camera, but the camera man was lucky enough to be on the spot when it occurred. Races are no uncommon occurrence in films, but one of such a variety is. The jockeys are seen astride horses hurdling the embankments, and there is not a time but one is not thrown from his horse, due to the beast's stumbling, and rolled among the hoofs of the other racers.

Each one of these scenes will cause even the calmest spectator to gasp for breath. It is said that in this race several of the jockeys were severely injured and three of them killed. It is not at all surprising, or hard to believe when one sees it on the film.

But this is not all that this episode has to offer in the way of excitement. Pauline and Harry take a daring leap from the top of a high wall of rock into the lake below, after they have made sure that there are no other means of escape from the gypsy band which is pursuing them, at the instigation of Pauline's uncle, who is still plotting to bring about the death of his charming niece.

The racing scene was introduced when Pauline, always bent upon excitement, bought Firefly, a speedy racing horse, and determined to enter the race herself as its rider. It would be asking too much to see Miss White herself thrown from her horse, and the substitution is a most clever one.

The first scene in this installment continues right on where the last one left off, and Pauline is seen bending over the basket of flowers, at the bottom of which is a snake sent her by a jealous gypsy. Harry notices that the flowers move and throws the basket to the floor and then beats the snake to death.

These Perils of Pauline do not seem to have deteriorated in the least since the very first episode, as might easily have been the case, but instead they seem to get better and better with each new release, proportionately creating greater interest as the story advances.

The title "The Perils of Pauline" has become a household word. This speaks volumes for the popularity of the picture. Probably there is no surer test of the merits of anything.

"THE DOLLAR MARK"

(World Film—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THERE is a picture that will be enjoyed by every audience in the country. No, it is not a war picture, but one made here in America, with our own American West forming a beautiful background, and the story is one teeming with excitement, full of action, but not overcrowded with events of the rapid fire order, and acted by players who obviously made a careful study of their parts.

SWEPT ON BY THE RAGING FLOOD.

It is extremely doubtful if the most severe critic of the motion picture could detect a fault in the entire five reels in regard to any of the essentials that unite to make a perfect production. Photography, acting, scenes and unity of the story are all as good as we have witnessed in recent productions.

The leads are played by Robert Warwick, who assumes the same role of James Gresham, the part which he created when the story was staged several years ago, and Barbara Tennant of the Eclair Company. Both of these stars seem to have a perfect understanding of their respective parts, performing excellently throughout the entire picture.

Aside from the fact that the story is good as a whole, there is a series of scenes that is worthy of special attention. Nothing as realistic and nothing as thrilling has been seen on the screen for some time. This big event comes when the two principals are in Jim's cabin, situated on the river bank, just below a huge dam. It has been pouring in torrents, and the waters of the river have been greatly swelled. Then the dam breaks, and the consequences are practically beyond description.

The waters come bursting through the dam so realistically that one can almost hear the roar. They sweep down to the cabin which resists their strength for a minute and then breaks up and is carried along with the rapid rush of the waters. Jim and the girl manage to stay on one side of the cabin, but are swept on down the river, until at length he manages to grasp a branch overhead. He ties himself to it and holds the raft back by shear strength.

Then it is over, but it is safe to say it will make a lasting impression on all those who see it. It is obvious that no rehearsal was possible, which should materially highten the praise for this thriller. Thriller it is in every one of the manifold phases of that word's meaning.

The story embraces the efforts that Gresham makes to keep his mine from the grasping hand of a trust, and when he triumphs and becomes a wealthy man, he still is forced to fight to hold his power. His cry is always, "money and more money," and at first he is so engrossed in his pursuit of wealth that he has no time for love, but it finally finds its way into his heart and he comes out triumphant in both respects.

NO WAR EFFECT ON DALLAS BUSINESS

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Dallas, Texas, Sept. 8.

IF the European war has had any ill effect on the film business in Dallas none of the managers or owners are making any howl. In fact, practically all Dallas picture men are very optimistic over the present conditions and declare that the business is holding up well.

Nearly every house in Dallas of any consequence has been refurnished and brightened up for the approaching winter season. The Garden has just completed remodeling work which cost in the neighborhood of $25,000.

Reports from smaller towns surrounding Dallas tell of improvements that are being made in film houses, the opening of others, and, in fact, the business seems to be picking up all over this section of the country.

"BLACK RODERICK"

(Eclectic—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

IT has often been said that costume dramas are the most difficult to present satisfactorily on the screen. The ease with which the Eclectic company has overcome all the obstacles that this type of play puts in the path of players and producer makes one doubt the truth of this remark, for "Black Roderick," one of their most recent releases, is distinctly an excellent picture play, accurate in the historical background or atmosphere, clear-cut and deft in the acting, thoroughly enjoyable from the point of view of story value.

Black Roderick, as must have been already guessed, is some sort of outlaw and a Scotchman. He is a poacher, and lived in the olden days when to rob a nobleman's stream of its trout or his park of its deer was considered a far more serious crime than to kill a man.

Black Roderick has become somewhat careless, and he leaves signs of his illegal work, so that the game warden of the young lord has a right to become suspicious. But Black Roderick has overheard the young lord making love to the warden's daughter, and when he is accused of poaching, he has a ready retort. Some time later, when the lord is in the forest and Black Roderick is also enjoying himself with hunting the deer, the game warden is killed when he is about his business.

Of course, Black Roderick does the cowardly deed, but the evidence is against the nobleman. But the truth comes out, and the rest of the picture is taken up with the thrilling chase after the poacher over the rugged Highlands of Scotland, to a precipitous crag, where he is hemmed in by troops on one hand and rock walls on the other, and is smoked out and forced to surrender.

Capitalizing Personality

By William Parker

That Asset Is Worth $500,000 to T. L. Tally, of Los Angeles, and in Seventeen Years It has Enabled Him to Grow from Proprietor of a Phonograph Parlor to One of the Most Successful Exhibitors on the Pacific Coast

WHAT is the psychology of success in the motion picture exhibition business?

Here is one answer—in human form.

He is T. L. Tally, of Los Angeles.

And here are the figures to prove it.

He owns his own theatre on Broadway in Los Angeles.

The theatre alone is valued at more than $100,000.

The property upon which the theatre stands is worth $400,000.

He owns the theatre and he owns the property.

The chrysalis of all this was a little phonograph parlor seventeen years ago. You remember the old phonograph parlors. You put a penny in the slot, stuck a couple of tubes in your ears, there was a buzz, a rasp and a wheezy tune.

Thomas Edison, at that time, was practically alone in the phonograph field. He also was working on motion picture machine improvements. Motion pictures were a novelty then, their field was narrow, their scope was limited.

TALLY became interested in these, as they were called then, moving pictures. He thought they would be a splendid feature to draw trade to his phonograph parlor. That single idea was the cornerstone of his present big fortune.

Tally to this day might still be puttering around in a cheap store on some little side street with a penny arcade, eking out a precarious livelihood, if it were not for that transient thought.

Tally brought the first motion picture machine to Los Angeles. It was among the first to leave the Edison laboratories at Orange, New Jersey.

Even after he got it he was in somewhat of a quandary as to what to do with it. But he rigged it up and gave a ten-minute show for ten cents—a cent a minute.

Those were the days of old time favorites, the Black Diamond Express, Niagara Falls, Shooting the White Horse Rapids and other STARTLING and DARING films.

Then came prize fights as features. These were special films, and of course the admittance price went up, the public willingly paying twenty-five and fifty cents for seats.

Soon Tally was in a perplexity. What was he going to do about this motion picture part of his business?

RIGHT then and there Tally developed a trait that has brought him thousands of dollars and thousands of customers; he began to study the likes and dislikes of those who came into his place. Ere long he was in a quandary. His customers liked music, and they like motion pictures. It was impossible for him to decide which was in the majority, those who liked music or those who liked pictures.

Here was his problem: If he divorced pictures from the music he would lose the picture customers. If he divorced music from the pictures he would lose his music customers.

And that is the reason that to-day motion pictures and music are linked indissolubly in Tally's theatre.

On the other hand, Tally is impatient of vaudeville. He wouldn't have it on his stage if it worked free as long as he is an exhibitor.

This studying of his patrons has become second nature to Tally. The personal equation enters largely into Tally's business and it is responsible for much of his success.

The personal equation, however, is for the good of the public; Tally, through an inborn or acquired modesty, forbids his personality to dominate his business, or compete with his theatre. Tally realizes that the people come to see the show, and not Tally.

DOES this personality bear fruit? Does it pay dividends?

Let this bear witness.

THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS' representative dropped in at Tally's theatre at 7:30 o'clock in the evening. When the show was over at 9 o'clock Tally was standing near the front door. The head buyer for one of Los Angeles' biggest department stores came up.

"Mr. Tally," he said, as he shook Tally by the hand, "I've just returned from New York and abroad and I want to tell you that you have the most elaborate picture theatre and best pictures to be found anywhere."

Another man came up. He was somewhat diffident. His wife stood near as he spoke to Tally. "Is this Mr. Tally?" "Yes," was the picture man's reply. "I just wanted to shake you by the hand, Mr. Tally. I am in the iron foundry business in Boston. My wife and I are tourists stopping at the Alexandria Hotel. I like to compliment business ability when I see it, and therefore I want to compliment you."

Tally was the first man in Los Angeles to open a theatre devoted exclusively to motion pictures. Up to a few years ago motion pictures were almost entirely a component part of entertainment.

Then a few of the more daring exhibitors decided that instead of being a unit they would be the whole show.

So while Tally's competitors were running combination houses, vaudeville and motion pictures, he embarked in the motion picture business. He opened a theatre at Sixth street and Broadway.

This was eight years ago.

Tally already was a power to be reckoned with and his competitors watched closely this innovation. Many there were who predicted his failure.

But Tally refused to heed their advice to put in a vaudeville turn or so.

"If the people want variety I'll give them music," was Tally's ultimatum as he threw open the doors of his theatre.

IT wasn't long before competitors about town were following Tally's example. Not only were the big houses being converted into motion picture theatres, but little motion picture theatres were being opened.

Not only did Tally's motion picture theatre draw crowds form the first, but night after night his audiences continued to increase. Half at hour before each show crowds would be waiting in front to enter.

Success has turned many a man's head. But it never has addled Tally's. While those crowds were clamoring for admittance he was not trying to see how many he could squeeze into a given space; he was not busy on plans for additional theatres.

He was giving personal attention to the audience.

No matter how large a force of ushers is employed, there are bound to be certain periods when half a dozen persons are waiting to be seated.

At these periods Tally is always hovering about, directing the boys, seating people himself or studying the likes and dislikes of the audience.

As a result of this personal attention he soon found that he was turning away as much money as he was taking in.

FINALLY Tally decided on another theatre. Here he met another problem. If he got the amount of space he wanted the rent was so high the investment was all for the landlord. So he decided to take the hand of the landlord out of his cash till by buying land of his own.

And when Tally decided to do this, some of his competitors woke up to the volume of business he had been doing. Tally's investment in real estate just to build a one-story building on was close up to half a million dollars.

During those eventful days Tally worked from early morning until late at night. During the day he superintended the construction of his building, at night he superintended his motion picture business.

But the result was well worth while. Tally's Broadway theatre is located between Seventh street and Eighth on Broadway.

This is the busiest part of Los Angeles. Nearby loom giant office buildings and great department stores.

Practically every city and suburban street-car line is within a block of his theatre, many of these lines pass directly in front of it.

THE interior of the theatre is a testimonial to his ideas. As the show consumes approximately one hour and a half, Tally provided large roomy seats so that every person in the audience is comfortable throughout the evening, or afternoon.

The theatre has a seating capacity of 900, the show is continuous from twelve o'clock noon to 10.30 o'clock at night. Prices are ten, twenty and thirty cents. The thirty-cent seats are in loges in the rear of the house. How does Tally conduct his business? That is a trade secret which a lot of his competitors would like to learn, but the greatest secret of the continuation of his success is that previously mentioned personality.

He studies the crowds. Whether Tally has ever read "Crowds" or "The Psychology of Crowds," is a question. But, nevertheless, he has the psychology of crowds down to a science. He never has stopped studying them.

For a long time he ran the best one-reel films to be obtained. He never haggled about price.

He was always in the market for the best, he was willing to pay for it and he wanted it first.

Then along came the two-reel films, slowly at first, as the producers felt their way with this innovation. While the producers were feeling their way Tally was feeling his way —he was watching the effect of the feature reels on his audiences.

He knew they liked the Biograph, Vitagraph and other well-known brands, but how would they like features alone? That was the question he was eager to answer.

VARIOUS features were tried out and finally Tally decided to abandon the one reels entirely. He had learned that the audiences not only came to be entertained, but that they liked, when they were on their way home, to feel that they had given an evening to mental instruction, in short, that they had seen something worth while.

Another Tally innovation is a large pipe organ which cost approximately $25,000, counting installation.

The organ is one of the most complete electrical instruments possible to manufacture. It contains every known improvement in the art of organ building. It was built by the Murray M. Harris Company and under the personal supervision of E. A. Spencer.

It contains 60 stops with six divisions, each a complete organ in itself, to wit: great organ, choir organ, echo organ, swell organ, solo organ and pedal organ.

In addition to this there is an orchestra also, as shown by the program.

This orchestra is still another Tally novelty. It is partly concealed from the audience when it plays accompaniments, but for its own numbers it is brought up level to the floor by an elevator, the elevator lifting the whole section of the floor where the players are seated.

T. L. TALLY, personally, is a man of great energy. He has that nervous restlessness which characterizes almost every successful man. He is full of practical ideas, brief but lucid in his conversation and a shrewd business man.

In his theatre he is never still, but every move is for a definite purpose; he wastes no time.

"To what do you ascribe your success?" he was asked.

"Studying the people and giving them what they want," was his reply.

CATHOLIC SUBJECTS ISSUED WEEKLY.

"The Animated Catholic Magazine" will soon be issued by the Emerson Currier Cinematograph Corporation, 1449 Broadway, N. Y., makers of the "Eesee" Films. It has been incorporated under the laws of the State of New York for $50,000 with the following officers:

William D. Emerson, president and general manager; George R. White, vice-president; J. Hugh Fish, treasurer; Bernard P. Currier, secretary. The firm will feature Mabel Emerson, late of the "American," "Atlas," "Columbia," and Canadian Bioscope, supported by Latonia Currier; Orette Alretus, late of the American and Kalem; Frederick Bernard, late of Selig Polyscope, Kalem, American, etc.; J. Hugh Fish, star of "The Three Collegians;" Bert Currier, and other equally well known players.

As its name implies it will be an "Animated" magazine dealing exclusively with catholic subjects. The first "issue" appearing simultaneously on October 5 in the parish halls, and church basements of 1,800 parishes throughout the United States, followed every six weeks by a new "issue."

WAR FILMS COMING IN SLOWLY

At present the five camera men engaged by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company to cover events at the front, from all accounts are incarcerated at various points in the war zone, as word has recently been received from London that it is well-nigh impossible to get any real scenes of the fighting now taking place in Europe.

At the start of the war the Universal sent 1,000,000 feet of film to their London office with instructions to their manager to get war views at any cost, and thus far only 200 feet of genuine war material has come from the other side. This 200 feet shows the capture of a scouting party of Uhlans in Belgium prior to the capture of Bruges by the German forces.

FILMS LAST SCENES ON MOUNTAIN TOP

Los Angeles, Sept. 7.

The Wilfred Lucas company of the Universal recently left for Big Bear valley, on the top of the Sierra Madre Mountains and forty miles from San Bernardino, Cal., where the final scenes of the first instalment of the "Trey o' Hearts" series, written by Louis Joseph Vance will be produced. The first three-reel instalment of this series is entitled "Flower o' the Flame." The stellar role is played by Cleo Madison.

Besides Miss Madison and Mr. Lucas, George Larkin, Edward Sloeman and Ray Hanford accompanied the party.

Live News of the Week

A. W. Goff, of the Cleveland branch of the Eclectic Film Exchange, is now manager of the Pittsburgh branch of the same company. He succeeds F. H. Vine, who has been transferred to Boston, Mass. Previous to going to Cleveland, Mr. Goff was connected with the Pittsburgh Calcium Company. He is well known to the film men of that section and has been welcomed back to the fold.

F. S. Frazer, formerly manager of the Majestic Theatre at Oil City, Pa., and owner of the Mecca Theatre at Ashtabula, O., has taken the position of manager of Gus Sun's booking office, which was formerly located in the Wabash building, but is now in the Schmidt building in Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh.

Arthur Roussel, vice-president of Pathé Freres, is still seriously ill at his residence in West New York. His condition shows no marked improvement and has caused regret among the many friends he has made in the film trade.

Director Ned Finley, of the Vitagraph Company, left New York City recently, accompanied by ten of the Vitagraph players, to resume the production of a picture at Hendersonville, N. C., where he previously met with an accident which caused him to stop work for a while. "O'Gary of the Royal Mounted" is the name of the picture.

The Nova Scotia rights for the weekly European war picture produced by the Novelty Slide Company have been purchased by the Sydney Amusement Company, of Canada, which operates motion picture houses in Sydney, East Sydney, Sydney Mines and Glace Bay.

Henry McRae, director of the Universal 101 Bison Company, has just finished producing a two-reel drama called "The Law of the Range." It is the first adaptation of Dr. H. Stafford, who wrote the scenario from the book by Wayne Groves Barrows.

Al. Christie, director of the Universal Nestor comedy company, has completed a fine comedy entitled "When Lizzie Went to College," in which Victoria Forde plays the lead. The picture shows the comical uproar that a western girl created while attending a girls' finishing school.

James Hills, of Nashville, Tenn., has accepted a position as musician at the Princess Theatre, Bowling Green, Ky.

Grace Cunard, leading lady of Francis Ford's Universal company, who gained great fame in the "Lucille Love" series in which she played the leading part opposite her director, has returned to the company after taking a much needed rest following her strenuous work in that popular serial.

GRACE CUNARD.

She is now appearing in "My Lady Raffles," a series of pictures, each one complete in itself, in which she plays "My Lady." These pictures are all mystery stories and are exceptionally lively and full of action.

Pearl White, the reckless heroine of "The Perils of Pauline," came near being seriously injured while the thirteenth episode of this story was in the progress of being filmed. Pauline was being chased by bandits and had to jump from the top of a high cliff into Saranac Lake below. Unfortunately she didn't hit the water in the right manner and the wind was knocked out of her. Director Gasnier proved the hero when he saw her feebly struggling in the water, and swam to her rescue. A half an hour later Miss White made the jump again with success.

Mae O'Neill, a stenographer in the New York office of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, is one of the leaders in a popularity contest among the girls of the Bronx, which is being held at Fox's Crotona Theatre.

The first prize for which this charming young lady is giving her competitors a good run is $500, besides an engagement to play leads in one of the popular film companies.

Tuesday, September 8, was Screen Club night at the Globe Theatre, New York, when a special showing of "Cabiria" was given for the members and their friends.

Henry Otto, director of one of the American companies, recently visited San Marcos Pass to film a number of scenes of "Daphnia," a picture that tells the conditions that existed in Kentucky fifteen years ago. It was written by Winnifred Greenwood.

The next release of the Jesse L. Lasky Company through the Paramount program will be "The Making of Bobby Burnit," featuring Edward Abeles and Bessie Barriscale.

John J. Coleman has resigned his position as studio manager for the Gene Gauntier Feature Players and in a short while will devote all of his time in looking after his chain of theatres in the south.

Just now Mr. Coleman is in Chicago to attend a meeting of the Supreme Council of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite Masons which is held in the middle of this month. Mr. Coleman is one of the three theatrical men in the world who have attained the honor of the thirty-third degree in Masonry.

During the week Sunday, September 13, the Bosworth picture with Hobart Bosworth in the leading role entitled "Burning Daylight" is the principal feature at the Strand Theatre, New York. The picture is taken from Jack London's story and is said to be a very convincing production. Others in the cast are Rhea Haines, J. Charles Haydon and George W. Hill.

The topical review will show some interesting scenes from Europe and the Eclair Scientia and musical attractions will complete the program.

H. C. Simeral, of the Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Company, who has been most successful in business in Pittsburgh, has formed a partnership with J. S. Mead for the sale of the machines.

Harry E. Reiff, an old-time exhibitor, is now connected with the Eclectic Film Exchange, Pittsburgh, in the capacity or road man. He is a hustler and should be able to land a large amount of business.

J. R. Newman, of the Ludwig Hommel and Company, Pittsburgh, has just returned from a business trip and reports business in fine shape, especially in projection machines and supplies. The company has just received the contracts for the complete outfit for two new theaters, one in Pennsylvania and the other in West Virginia.

The Eaco Film Company, of which Edwin August is the president, has engaged Bennie Zeidman, formerly of Liberty and Lubin, to take charge of their publicity. The company is actively engaged in production.

Albert W. Hale, who recently joined the Kalem company's studio at Santa Monica, Cal., as producing manager, had already established a reputation for stage management of a high order.

Mr. Hale first entered the motion picture business in the capacity of producer four years ago. He then became associated with the American studios of Pathé Freres at Jersey City, N. J. Since then he has been with Thanhouser, Vitagraph, Famous Players and other important firms.

The reviewers who saw the production entitled, "For His Father's Life," at a recent censorship showing, declared it to be one of the strongest Western dramas filmed this year. "For His Father's Life," featuring Joe Ryan,

(Scene from "For His Father's Life"—Eclair)

Mildred Bright and Will Sheerer, was released by the Eclair Film Company, Inc., on Sunday, September 13, and contains more punches than the usual three reeler.

A wonderful jump from horseback to a moving train; a race with the fast express; a rough-and-tumble fight on a hand car and a fifty-foot drop with a lasso are a few of the really thrilling incidents which make this picture continuous in action from start to finish. The story is clearly told and the parts handled by capable artists.

Crane Wilbur, hero of the Electric serial, "The Perils of Pauline," has just concluded a successful vaudeville engagement at Dales 116th Street Theatre, New York City. He will extend the engagement for two weeks, as his contract with the United Booking Office calls for that length of time.

Mr. Wilbur has been playing only at night, as the rest of his time is taken up with "The Perils of Pauline." It is said that he will appear regularly in vaudeville during the coming winter.

The Picture Playhouse Film Company has opened an office at 5 South Wabash avenue, Chicago, under the management of S. C. Bestar, who has had a long experience in the field and is well known to Chicago exhibitors.

The Star Theatre, the exclusive feature house on Madison street, has booked first run on all the Picture Playhouse's feature releases, past and future. A number of the other houses have booked, following the lead of the Star, and the outlook for big business looks good.

The Picture Playhouse has now five exchanges open and several more under negotiation, and all are reporting increasing business.

The Novelty Slide Company have produced a set of song slides illustrating the latest songs of Shapiro, Bernstein and Company, entitled "The Fatherland, the Motherland, the Land of My Best Girl."

Myrtle Stedman is shown here as she appears in "Pursuit of Phantom" opposite Hobart Bosworth, who produced and wrote this photoplay for Bosworth, Inc.

MYRTLE STEDMAN.

The picture was taken at Boyle Heights and shows Miss Stedman's pigtail, which comes down well below her waist-line and all of which is hers.

M. Feldstein, a Canadian representative of Warner's Features, Inc., recently arranged with J. Carling, manager of the Flower Theatre, the leading photoplay house of Ottawa, to show a selection of headliners from the Warner's Feature list, before his Royal Highness, the Duke of Connaught and Leinster, who is the Governor-General of Canada, and the Duchess of Connaught, together with their daughter, Princess Patricia.

The Duke, who is also a lieutenant-general in the British army, was much impressed with Warner's big war feature, "A Born Warrior," and its sequel "Exiled." He said that these productions, aside from their dramatic and historical value, were remarkable for their faithful "military atmosphere."

SPECIAL FILM REVIEWS

"For Those Unborn." (Majestic-Mutual. Two reels. Sunday, Sept. 6.)—The idea in this psychological drama is a good one, but it is crudely and illogically worked out.

A girl who is engaged to be married learns that she is a victim of tuberculosis, and the thought of the effect that this might have on her children determines her in breaking the engagement. She goes West for cure, and meets another man who falls in love with her. She tells her secret to him, and then returns to her home and runs upon the wedding of her first love and another woman. She backs away, broken-hearted, but is consoled by the realization of duty performed.

"Break, Break, Break." (American-Mutual. Two reels. Wednesday, Sept. 9.)—Tennyson's fine little poem beginning with these words offers the starting point for this appealing drama. An old man sits on a rocky coast as the waves beat upon the cliffs, and the scenes where he loved and lost come back to him in reminiscences.

The man had loved devotedly, but the woman gave herself to another and they went off to sea. A storm wrecked the ship and the body of the woman was washed upon the shore and to the arms of the man. It is a sad story, and its heart interest is accentuated by the sorrowful figure of the old man on the rocks looking out upon the sea that tore his love from him.

"Silent Valley." (Imp-Universal. Two reels. Monday, September 7.)—In which King Baggot appears as the terror of Silent Valley, feared by all the inhabitants, but a woman tames him, and in a pretty way, too. A very pleasing story, with excellent moments of comedy interspersed between the more dramatic situations.

"A Summer Resort Idyll." (Edison. Wednesday, Sept. 16.)—If anyone had any doubt that money does not count with most marriageable young women nowadays, it would very likely be dispelled after seeing this picture, a comedy that really is at bottom satiric.

A young millionaire tires of the ceaseless attentions which he receives wherever he goes. He exchanges places with a friend who is not so wealthy, and the two set out for a summer hotel. The ladies all flock to the pretended millionaire as soon as the news of his arrival is received, and only one girl will pay any attention whatever to the real one. When the truth leaks out, the poor young man wearies of the idolatry, it is too late for the throng of money-pursuers, for the real millionaire has become engaged to the one girl.

Nearly all of the women in the picture have good looks, which makes it rather surprising that they will run after any man.

"The Arrow's Tongue." (Miller Brothers-Warners. Two reels.)—An exciting picture in which an uprising of the Indians is the principal topic and the manner in which the settlers were saved by a half-breed boy, who bore an arrow in his shoulder, rode among the settlers and warned them of the uprising. The picture is in the vision form as an old man digs up a skull, and then the whole story appears before him.

"The Mystery of the Sleeping Death." (Kalem. Two reels. Monday, Sept. 14.)—Based upon the ever fascinating theory of the reincarnation of human souls, this two-part drama fails to follow any of the generally accepted beliefs.

For instance, when the author says that these two persons, man and woman, fall into this sleep every century, he is entirely at variance with what Pythagoras taught and what the most faithful Pythagoreans believe. And it must be supposed that he is trying to reproduce in some sort of fashion this doctrine of the transmigration of souls from one human body to another, or there would be nothing to the piece.

"The Fable of the Regular Beanery and the Peachy Newcomer." (Essanay. Wed., Sept. 2.)—George Ade deserves a big part of the credit for making this such a delightful and diverting comedy, but the players do their full share and make it funnier in real life than it could possibly be in imagination. The newcomer is certainly a peach, as interpreted by a stunning young woman, and no wonder the sitters at the "regular beanery," young and old, lose their heads over her, until her husband turns up.

"Jean of the Wilderness." (Thanhouser-Mutual. Two reels. Tuesday, September 8.)—This drama breathes the freedom and the primitiveness of the great Northwest, where might makes right, and where the strength of a man's arm and the coolness of his nerve are the most important things in life.

The hero, Jean, has these in greatest quantity; consequently he gets the best of the villain, Jim Haskins, who has committed a murder and laid it at the door of the girl's father. Jean, having got rid of Haskins, can devote himself henceforth with all his heart to the girl.

"A Price on His Head." (Hepworth, Two reels.)—There has been a lot of kidnapping stories in motion pictures, and this one doesn't add anything new unless it is the ease with which the detective ungags and unbinds himself after he has been made prisoner by the kidnappers.

The simplicity with which he manages to undo these ropes is astounding, but the stupidity of the kidnappers in tying him so that he could release himself so readily is more so. And to cap it all, he grabs a looking-glass and signals his distress to his assistant, who is waiting not far distant—for what reason we do not know, unless simply to catch this message.

Some of the recent Hepworth releases have been very creditable pictures, and it is a pity that the standard has not been maintained in this latest.

"The Rajah's Vow." (Kalem. Two reels. Mon. Aug. 10.)—The subtlety and patience of the Hindoo when revenge is the motive is admirably conceived and presented in this drama.

The Rajah has been placed under a strict vow by his father to revenge the theft of his favorite wife by the English Commissioner. The death of this man and his wife are accomplished after they have returned to England, but it is as if a bolt from heaven had struck them down, so far as any knowledge or clue can be obtained.

The plot of the Rajah is then against the daughter, who is the wife of an officer in India. With poison, cobras, daggers and bribed servants the avenger attempts her life and that of her child, but is thwarted each time.

Suspense is admirably contrived without artificiality. The Rajah and his servant, played by Douglas Gerrard and Paul C. Hurst, are true Hindoos in suavity, cunning and cruelty.

"The Other Kid's Sister." (Electic. One reel.)—This picture, acted by children, will amuse audiences of the same age as the actors, more than grown-ups. It is the old story of two rivals and their final reconciliation. Not much action.

FOR ANY DAY IN THE YEAR

A PLAN he used successfully to keep his house filled during the hot months, but which would work with equal success at any other time of year, was recently tried by John J. Homan, proprietor of the Mystic, at Alton, Ia.

Alton has a population of 1,100. Mr. Homan, besides being an exhibitor, is also a merchant. He found little difficulty getting his theatre filled when he put on something special, but the regular attendance was low. The performance varied in price, as many of them do, the cost being ten or fifteen cents when extra features were being shown, or five cents when there was only a program. The average cost was nearer ten cents.

He had a series of tickets printed and began selling them twenty for $1. He advertised the bargain and sold many from the ticket window. He put others in the stores, giving a small commission. Many young girls then took and sold them to their friends and acquaintances, getting five tickets for every twenty they sold.

The plan worked. It not only made a small profit, but it got the people coming. Now the Mystic is filled regularly and the public is familiar with the theatre, its proprietor and the pictures. Of course, the right kind of films were shown. Very few men, women or children live in Alton who have not been to the Mystic many times.

FILM THEATRE PARTIES

Theatre managers in a number of Kentucky towns are finding it a profitable undertaking to encourage the younger members of local society to take advantage of motion pictures as a new and enjoyable feature of entertainment.

Parties are becoming more frequent in a large number of Kentucky towns where the theatre party is becoming a fad.

A NOVEL ADVERTISEMENT

IN all of the advertisements of the Miller Theatre, Los Angeles, a small map, showing the exact location of the house, is now being used.

Last week the management issued very elaborate announcements of the change of the musical policy of the theatre, in installing an orchestra, which in addition to giving the bookings of the house for several weeks, contained fine half tone cuts of the foyer, auditorium and lobby.

Arizona Theatres Proof Against Summer Heat

120 in the Shade Fails to Diminish Patronage, Though Two Airdomes Are Forced to Close—Park Only Competitor

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Phoenix, Ariz., Sept. 8.

WITH the hot weather on the wane the exhibitors of Phoenix and incidentally of Arizona, look with some amusement on the reports of the exhibitors in other sections where the mercury has been the means of causing the house manager uneasiness. Here in Phoenix, where the thermometers register around 120 in the shade (and there is no shade) most any day in summer, the problem of solving the "attendance in hot weather" has not proven a hard one despite the great heat of midday.

The nights are cool and therein lies the secret of the good business that has prevailed at screen houses this summer.

Arizona, closely allied to the Pacific coast, is far ahead of many localities in the matter of screen offerings, for the exhibitor has an eye on the public pulse through the happenings in Los Angeles, which is just at the door, so to speak.

The houses here have done exceptionally well all summer, and the approach of fall finds all of them in excellent financial condition.

While regular programs are the rule at most of the houses the feature has found much favor, and the big special screen offerings are drawing well. The Arizona, recently remodeled and rechristened under the management of Mr. Harry Nace, a pioneer exhibitor in the state, is attracting splendid business with a four change program weekly which sees a big feature employed in the mid week.

The Lion Theatre is having one of the best seasons in the history of this house and will make, it is understood, extensive improvements this fall to meet the growing demands of its clientele. The Lamarra, under the guidance of John Barncord, is a strong factor in the local screen colony. The Plaza and Regale complete the list and both report an exceptional summer.

It would seem that the Arizona Theatre has solved the five-cent question for this section at least. All of the houses here get from ten to twenty cents admission. This spring an airdome was opened in the down town district under ideal conditions, and made a charge of ten cents.

It did not last a month, despite the fact that it looked on paper a sure winner. The long hot summer and the thirst of the patron for out door amusement was cited before it opened as the reason for its possible success. Following it less than a month another down town airdome, with a good program and under good conditions, was launched. only to meet the fate of the first.

The only thing that caused any perceptible inroad on the film business was the opening of Riverside park, where a big swimming pool with concessions and dancing al fresco attracted well in the early summer. Riverside offered pictures without addition to the gate charge of ten cents, but the pool got the big play, and the patron took his pictures in the usual form in one of the up-town houses.

Warner Will Star in Suffrage Film

Famous Players Actor Lead in Picture Designed to Help Women's Movement—Will Not Be Shown in Competition with Exhibitors

H. B. WARNER, the star of the Famous Players Film Company's five-reel production, "The Lost Paradise," will appear in a special suffrage film-play, it is said, at the request of Mrs. Medill McCormick, the noted suffrage leader of Chicago.

"The Lost Paradise," by Ludwig Fulda and the late H. C. DeMille, which created a sensation at the Strand Theatre, New York, is said to be one of the greatest dramas of capital and labor ever written, and in the film version of the subject H. B. Warner portrays the role of the loyal factory superintendent who is the central character in the gigantic struggle between the two master forces of modern industry, and who strives to reconcile the contending elements.

It was this role and its vigorous enactment that suggested to the suffragist leaders Warner's adaptability for a similar characterization devoted to the suffrage cause.

Mrs. McCormick, after obtaining the permission for this purpose of George C. Tyler, of the Liebler company, under whose management H. B. Warner appears on the stage, found it necessary to secure the consent of Mr. Zukor, who controls the exclusive film services of the star.

The film producer was at first reluctant to give the suffragist leader his sanction, fearing it would provide unfair competition, for the theatres that had booked the Famous Players-Warner production, but finally consented when it was understood that the film would be presented only to special clienteles with the advertised announcement that the subject was not a dramatic production or commercial enterprise, but solely a suffrage argument.

The suffrage film will be exhibited throughout the country between now and the November elections and is expected to make a hit.

Universal Backs Wilson in Neutrality

Carl Laemmle Arranges for Two Reel Film Entitled "Be Neutral," Which Was Made by the West Coast Universal Forces in Los Angeles in Forty-eight Hours, Evidence of the Efficacy of Motion Pictures in Moulding Public Sentiment.

AS an example of the good that can be accomplished by moving pictures and the rapidity with which it can be brought about, nothing could be more pointed than the effort which President Laemmle, of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, is making to uphold the hands of President Wilson in his effort to preserve strict neutrality between the United States and the various warring nations, and his advice to all nationalities in our own country to refrain from discussing the war.

There are so many of the nations which are now fighting which are represented in this cosmopolitan country of ours that discussion of the war is bound to lead to hard feelings and to even more—in some instances it has already brought the partisans to blows.

THE film people realize better than others what wonderful moulders of sentiment the pictures are, and Mr. Laemmle resolved to do all in the power of the immense motion picture resources of the Universal to support the President in keeping America peaceful within and without.

In many of the releases which are now being titled, Mr. Laemmle has caused to be inserted titles which serve to remind Americans that this country and all its people are neutral.

The following are two examples of these captions:

"A GENTLE REMINDER

The millions who enjoy Universal moving pictures are again reminded of President Wilson's plea for strict neutrality. Forget the horrors of war. Don't take sides. Appreciate the glories of peace.

BE AN AMERICAN FIRST!

No matter where you were born, you're an American NOW. President Wilson asks you to be neutral. Remember his request when next you are tempted to take sides in a war discussion.—CARL LAEMME, President, University Film Manufacturing Company.

BUT in addition to this very effective way of influencing public sentiment, Mr. Laemmle has decided that a special film showing the dangers of these discussions in a country where all should be at peace, no matter who else may be at war, would be better than titles in all the Universal films.

By telegraph he instructed the manager of the immense West Coast plant, I. Bernstein, to have a suitable story written showing the folly of such discussions and the trouble and danger to innocent persons which almost always ensues upon such a discussion.

The story was written, Los Angeles was asked to participate in the work of production, two thousand feet were taken, and the picture was finished within forty-eight hours. It is now on the express, speeding to New York.

The whole operation has thus far taken less than a week.

LOS ANGELES gave itself up hook, line and sinker to the enterprise. At the request of the Chamber of Commerce of the city two thousand of the residents of the city appeared in the film besides the principals.

Four companies of the Los Angeles Fire Department, a police captain and fourteen regular policemen all engaged in a big scene in the busiest part of the business part of the city, and all the city officials gave all the assistance in their power to make the films as realistic as possible.

When the film was shipped yesterday it was decided in the offices of the Universal to entitle it, "Be Neutral," and it will go out under this caption as the contribution of the Universal to the cause which President Wilson has so near his heart.

The following is a synopsis of the story of "Be Neutral":

TWO old men stand talking before a cottage. In the background two younger men bid their wives good-bye and start for work.

On their way they meet the two old men, the quartette joining to discuss the foreign war situation. Up the block, before a bank, a crowd stands gazing at a large map of the war zone, each discussing the situation according to his own views.

The two younger men leave the two old men, pausing on their way to join the crowd before the bank.

Later, in front of a factory, the two young men join other workers. Here an argument is going on, and the two young men take sides and enter the discussion. High words follow, which quickly leads to blows.

The fight attracts the attention of a worker within the factory, who leaves his hot iron and gazes from the window at the fight below. Seeing his faction in trouble, the worker hurries to join the belligerents. The neglected hot iron seers its way into the garment beneath it, the result being a fire which soon gains headway.

The fighting men below surge from the factory alley into the street. A policeman, finding himself unable to cope with the mob, sends in a riot call. The reserves respond, and many in the mob are injured.

Innocent spectators suffer, and are injured. The fire department responds to an alarm sent from the burning factory, but their efforts are in vain and the factory is consumed.

The finale of the picture fades into a vision, in which the two old men, the innocent agitators, see the wives of the two young men as they stand by their husbands, the factory in ruins, the workers standing about, bemoaning the fact that a trifling argument resulted in a catastrophe.

According to Consul General R. E. Mansfield, Vancouver, B. C., writing in the Daily Consular Reports, the Canadian Western Lumber Company, of New Westminster, B. C., which operates one of the largest sawmills on the continent, has had moving-picture films made of the various units of the plant, which has a capacity of 400,000 feet of lumber and 1,000,000 shingles daily, and an auxiliary door factory, with a capacity of 1,000 doors a day.

The films, which reproduce realistic views of the various units of the great plant, including the logging and cutting of huge trees into lumber and shingles, will be placed on the regular circuits for the movies in Canada, the United States and Europe, giving to the lumber industry in this province a wide range of advertising and directing the attention of people all over the world to the great natural resources of British Columbia.

AITKEN VISITS PACIFIC COAST

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Los Angeles, Sept. 7.

Harry E. Aitken, president and general manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, arrived in Los Angeles recently from New York, for a short visit to the studios of the Majestic Motion Picture Company in Hollywood, the New York Motion Picture Company in Los Angeles and Santa Monica canyon, and he may probably spend a few days at the American studio at Santa Monica before returning east. He was accompanied by his brother, Roy Aitken, president of the Western Import Company, also of New York City.

The Operator's Exchange

Problems of the Operator

EDITOR'S NOTE.—This section is designed to be of service to the experienced operator for assistance in the solution of problems of the booth. No matter how long an operator has been following his profession points are constantly arising upon which he feels the necessity of expert advice. It is with this purpose in mind that the present department has been inaugurated.

Why Carbons Are Opposite

R. B. asks: Why are the carbons in motion picture lanterns placed opposite each other? Cannot they be arranged in parallel, or side by side? The light would certainly be much brighter, and it would no more be necessary to use arc regulators or controllers.

Answer: Your suggestion for a new arrangement of the carbons is old and belongs to Jablochkoff. In the Jablochkoff arc lamp the carbons were in fact maintained at a constant distance apart by a device which dispensed with any regulating means. The system was based on a method of arranging the carbons parallel to each other and insulating them from each other by a block of kaolin or other non-conducting material.

When the arc was formed the insulating material was volatilized and the arc was maintained between the carbons. The Jablochkoff system was not a success when tried with direct current, owing to the fact that the rate of consumpion of the positive carbon is about twice that of the negative, so that after awhile the positive carbon was consumed to a distance much lower down than the negative carbon, thus leaving a greater separation between the two carbons than the thickness of the separating material, which after resulted in the extinguishing of the arc.

Your idea, therefore, if I have perfectly understood it, is not new, and I would not encourage you to spend your time and money on it. Nevertheless write us again; perhaps you will strike a more profitable idea next time.

Use of Condensers

J. K. asks: May I ask what condensers are needed for; could not the objective do what is required to focus a good picture?

Answer: Your question can only be answered by referring you to a reliable book on optics, wherein you will find the difference between a condensing lens and an objective lens.

I may say, though, that in view of the light coming from the illuminant being spread in all directions and the image on the film being relatively very small, if there was no condenser in the projection machine, only a small part of the light would traverse the film and only a very poor picture would be shown on the screen.

The condenser concentrates all the rays of light coming from the illuminator and directs them to the gate, where they pass through the film in order to be projected on the screen. But the images do not always focus and there comes the objective lens which has charge of focussing the images on the screen.

The condenser gives the full light and the objective gives the correct image by bending the rays of light bearing the said image and causing them to converge on pre-determined points, just like a spray brush with a flow of water coming from a funnel. The funnel is the condenser and the spray brush the objective.

Cause of Rain Effect

T. R. asks: We have an old ——— machine, but we use only first-class films. I am at a closs to explain why we often have trouble somewhat similar to rain effects. It is certainly not rain, because our films come brand new, and when projected with another machine show nothing of the kind. I don't think there is any fault with the shutter, which one of my friends, an expert, has thoroughly examined and found satisfactory. Can you suggest a remedy?

Answer: If your film is new and your projection machine old, and if you are sure that the shutter is all right, you must have the gate carefully examined. Probably the pressure exerted on the film is insufficient, the springs being out of order, thus the film is carried away after every movement of the intermittent mechanism instead of stopping during the predetermined fraction of a second, which is absolutely necessary in order to obtain a clear image.

According to scientific laws a body of dead or inert material has a tendency to store a certain amount of energy in itself when movement is communicated to it by another medium. If for instance, you throw a stone. It does not necessarily fall where you lower your hand, but proceeds much further. According to the effort, the same thing happens with the film. The intermittent movement causes it to be carried away from the aperture, while the shutter hides the light and consequently the movement. But the film instead of stopping at the required point when the mechanism stops, continues its movement. The gate and aperture plate therefore have been combined with a system of springs which by the pressure they exert on the film cause it to be steady during the short moment it is traversed by the jet of light and projected on the screen.

"Murder Will Out"

"Moving picture shows—including films, machine and operator—will be provided churches and other institutions this fall and winter by the West Side Y. M. C. A. at nominal price. Several churches have already made contracts for the Y. M. C. A. to supply them with one show a week."

The above squib appeared in the New York "Globe" of August 20, and it appears that the Y. M. C. A. while being (more or less of) a benevolent organization, is not above keeping a watchful eye on the "root of all evil."

After the great amount of GOOD (?) that they have done for the chauffeur, they are now about to turn their paternal attention to the crying needs of the benighted and downtrodden motion picture operator.

While the operator has, up to the present time, not shown any perceptible amount of enthusiasm or appreciation of their efforts on his behalf, still this does not deter them from doing their duty.

Of course the Y. M. C. A. has had but to follow a precedent established by other semi-religious institutions, in thus becoming one of the commercial factors of the game.

It is just another instance of the student gaining experience at the expense of the employer, so of course nothing to complain about, so long as the churches are NOT a TOTAL LOSS.

W. D. CHANEY.

THE IDEAL OPERATOR

By H. M. Schoenbaum

THE man who is entitled to the above denomination is not necessarily a genius. He is a man who tries to make use of all his abilities and the advantages at his disposal. He never misses an opportunity to improve.

What can a poor operator do? someone will say. Well, an operator is just as able to better himself, like any other individual. If we consider that the first operator of a projection machine, A. Kircher, lived between 1602 and 1680 when no human being had ever thought of the electric arc, in fact when 99 per cent. of things used today were absolutely unknown and undreamed of, and that the art of projection is not yet absolutely perfect, we can conclude that cinematography is only at its beginning, and that the operator, among many others, can still afford to take some trouble for the advancement of our profession, and that after all there are still sufficient chances of getting returns.

There is a future for a good operator who can distinguish himself in his own sphere by trying to be a little more than the average; he will certainly be appreciated and sought for everywhere. Every intelligent person realizes that it is worth while paying an operator more money if he makes his services more useful, and if he is economical enough to make his wages weigh less on his boss' shoulders.

There are various ways in which the operator can reduce expenses to a minimum. Let us take for example carbons. If properly and carefully handled, and the current spared, will it not result in economy of condensers? It all follows, and it is no mystery, that the man who knows his business costs his firm less than the ordinary crank-driver.

The operator is really the sun in the theatrical sky wherein all other members are more or less his satellites. He must, therefore, feel that his responsibilities are a great deal more considerable than those of the other members of the theatrical family. He can at will wipe out other people's blunders just as he is liable to spoil other people's efforts. As a matter of fact, what would be the use for the cashier to be smiling and cordial if the operator by his neglect to watch his carbons or permitting the film to break at the most thrilling part of the plot disgusts the patron and drives him out of the theatre? The operator must not forget that hearty and intelligent co-operation among its members makes the theatre interesting and agreeable, not only to its patrons, but also to those who depend upon it for their weekly salaries.

The operator is apt to become a sort of artist in his profession instead of remaining simply an artisan.

The artist operator will not be satisfied with the noise of the intermittent movement to make sure that the patrons in the theatre are getting their dimes' forth of feet of film on the screen. He will study every current make of film, and treat it according to its merits. He will thus find that certain films are slightly thicker than others; also that the perforation is not the same in all films. Every factory has its own methods of treating films, so that certain raw films of equal length before their chemical treatment vary in length after they have been completely finished and made ready for projection. The result is to vary the area between the holes or perforations. It is really an art to obtain irreproachable pictures with all the different films by using the same machine.

Certainly the profession of crank-pusher is not a very profitable one, because there is no reason for paying a man of little professional knowledge more money than requested by other men of equal ability, but the operator who possesses his art has less competition, and his services must be appreciated by the man who can afford to pay.

An intelligent, careful and studious man is not merely an operator in the theatre; he is also the exhibitor's adviser; his word will be taken and considered, and when he needs something for his work he will get it.

There is a future for the right man. Why, therefore, not try to be the right man yourself by increasing your knowledge and ability by continuous efforts? The motion picture art is only in its infancy, and you are mistaken if in your eyes it appears under the features of a worn-out and resourceless old man.

In and Out of Los Angeles Studios

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Los Angeles, September 7.

ACTIVITIES at the studio, laboratory and offices of the Balboa Feature Films Company, which release through the Box Office Attractions Company, hear out fully the statements made hy E. D. Horkheimer, president of the company, upon his return from an European tour.

At that time be stated that the European war would for a short time affect the American film manufacturers, but in the end would he more than beneficial to American interests of this field. Mr. Horkheimer arrived from London on the last trip of the Vaterland, and came direct to the home of the company at Long Beach.

In response to urgent telegrams from releasing companies in New York City, all the negative films completed and all prints have heen sent East. The last shipment was the largest made out of the Los Angeles district and consisted of almost 100,000 feet of negative and many cases of positive. The shipment was accompanied to New York by H. M. Horkheimer, general manager of the company.

Cabanne Has New Thriller

An additional producing company has begun work at the studio of the Balboa company under the direction of William Wolbert, who has heen identified with some of the most successful producing companies. This organization is making comedy for the present, and began a series under the name of "Ima Simp, Detective," in which Ben Deely and Marie Wayne (Mrs. Deely), comedy favorites for the past ten years on the Orpheum and Keith circuits, play the leads. One of the team's recent hits was "The New Bellboy." Percy de Gaston is camera man for the new aggregation and Charles Dudley, Henry Stanley, Brent Carruthers, Suzanne Rogers, Rohert Barlow and Alice Brookton are others in the cast.

William Christy Cahanne has been engaged in making the thriller of his career, a two or three-reel picture, to be released under the title of "The Making of a Man." Refused hy the girl he loves, because she thinks him a coward, a young railroad engineman studies aviation, and it is while flying that he sees a runaway engine, cut loose by bandits, racing at full speed toward the oncoming train in charge of his sweetheart's father.

A race hetween an aeroplane and the unmanned engine, a drop down a rope from the flyer to tbe engine, and several other new stunts are filmed. The aeroplane work is accomplished by an English military officer, retired.

The Western Lubin studio has been closed down for a period of two or three weeks, during the absence of Managing Director Capt. Wilbert Melville, who is in the East on a vacation and husiness trip. He will return home by the way of Panama Canal, aboard a new 220-foot launch recently purchased.

A split-reel comedy scenario completed in thirty minutes is a record made by Calder Johnstone of the Universal west coast studio. Because of delay in preparation of props and settings there was nothing for the Blythestone comedy company to do, unless a new scenario was produced on short notice.

Quick Work on Play

Manager Isadore Bernstein put it up to Mr. Johnstone, with the advice that the company would be ready to work in thirty minutes. In less than a half an hour the working script for "On Ag'in, Off Ag'in, Finnegan" was completed, given an O. K., and in the hands of the producing director. Eddie Boland is Finnegan in the picture.

Anita Loos, of San Diego, who is considered hy scenario editors one of the most successful comedy scenario writers and whose scripts have been bought by all companies, was recently in Los Angeles and saw a portion of one of her stories, "The Million Dollar Bride," filmed at the Reliance-Majestic studio under the direction of Eddie Dillon. In this Fay Tincher is featured and Tod Browning and Eddie Dillon take prominent parts.

The Donald Crisp producing company, including Mae Marsh, F. A. Turner, Robert Harron and Frank Bennett, is home from Bear Lake Valley, where scenes for "The Great God Fear" were made. The photoplayers had many exciting experiences, including the killing of rattlesnakes, deer hunting and the felling of a tree fifteen feet in diameter.

"Father" Turner makes the claim that he did balf of the sawing of the tree, and Frank Bennett was mourned as dead for a few moments until it was discovered that a hlank cartridge had been substituted for a real one that had been placed in a gun.

"Taming the Amazon" Put On Another Los Angeles newspaper man has produced and sold a motion picture scenario. "Taming the Amazon," a one-reel comedy, now heing produced by Sheriff Arthur Mackley and players at the Reliance studio, was written by W. E. Keefe, for several years a reporter and feature writer on local papers, who is now in charge of the publicity department of the Majestic Motion Picture Company's studio. Mr. Mackley appears as a Western sheriff in this picture and seeks to round up a band of suffragettes.

For playing the part of Mohammed, in "The Carpet from Bagdad," a multiple-reel feature now being produced by Colin Campbell, from the story by Harold MacGrath, Charles Clary has secured the use of a very valuable Oriental wardrohe, brought to this country by a wealtby Arahian, who recently visited bis former native land. Included are three burnooses of silk, silver and camel hair, each woven in one piece and weighing more than three pounds.

The headgear is very interesting, being composed of a silk one and one and one-third yards square, and a heavy douhle silk and silver cord, which holds the scarf in place.

The Tidewater Realty Company is the title of a tbree-reel picture just completed by Director Bertram Bracken of the Balboa Feature Film Company, at Long Beach. In this a number of very successful scenes were made at Balhoa Island, where the breakers are very high. Joe Massey, Fred Whitman and Bruce Randall rode a boat in and miraculously escaped death on the rocks.

Erect Oriental City For Drama

The Selig Jungle Zoo on Mission Road was recently the scene of many Oriental pictures. A very elaborate Oriental city has heen built under the direction of Gabriel Pollock, who spent several years in Turkey in Asia.

The hig scenes for "The Carpet from Bagdad" were produced. Arrangements were made for hundreds of extra players. Director Colin Campbell, Kathlyn Williams, Wheeler Oakman and Al Green spent considerable time at San Diego making scenes for this picture.

Donald Crisp, Majestic company director, purchased a 1914 National racing automohile and entered it in the Los Angeles to Phoenix road race on September 9. Charles Muth, who assisted Guy Ball, driver of the winning Marmon in the 1913 race, drove the car for Mr. Crisp, who planned a big dinner for memhers of his company, following the finish of the race with Muth first. The car has a 138-inch wheel base and develops 130 horsepower.

Robert Brotherton, superintendent of the Balboa Feature Film Company laboratory, has produced a decided novelty in tinting for triple exposure scenes in the four-reel picture, "The Will o' tbe Wisp," each exposure being a distinct color. This brings it out much stronger and makes far more contrast between the different exposures.

Film Universal Picture in Quick Time

Records for speedy production of a motion picture were broken when all directors, actors, actresses, scenario writers, and office employes of the Universal studios took part in the filming of an anti-war demonstration picture to be released under the title "Let Us Have Peace," from the utterance of Gen. U. S. Grant. President Carl Laemmle wired to the west coast studio advising that he desired a motion picture showing how an argument over the European war might bring very severe losses in this country, to use in connection with the campaign of the federal government in maintaining a strict neutrality in this country.

The next morning the scenario was completed and all directors were called for a consultation with Manager Isadore Bernstein, who informed them of just what was wanted. Each was given his portion of the working script with the instructions that the picture be turned into the laboratory that evening. It consisted of about seven hundred feet and was finished at the time prescribed. The positive print was projected at the studio two days after and the negative forwarded to the New York office that afternoon.

Practically every member of the west coast Universal producing companies is in this picture. By a vote of the directors Charles Giblyn was selected as director general in the absence of Otis Turner, who is now enjoying a two months' vacation, and Mr. Giblyn supervised the production.

The picture opens with scenes of men going to work. An argument is started over the European war. As the men near the factory others join and take sides. A fight follows whicb becomes a riot. A workman in the factory rushes to the window to see what is going on and becomes involved, leaving an iron on the cloth he is pressing. The hot iron causes a fire which burns down the factory. In the riot a score of men are hadly hurt, the police are beaten and several are killed.

Effects of Riot

Following the scenes of the riot, at the suggestion of The Motion Picture News correspondent, the message of President Wilson, urging that all citizens of the United States aid in maintaining a strict neutrality, is sbown. Following this is a triple exposure picture in which the original wranglers see the result of their argument in the ruined factory, maimed men, fatherless children, and widows.

All scenes for the picture were filmed in tbe retail district of Los Angeles, the principal riot taking place on Mercantile Place, between Broadway and Spring. For a numher of views the lobby of the Isis Theatre, the home of the Universal program, was used as a background. Three cameras were used here.

Four camera men, L. O. Bartholomew, E. G. Ullman, Gilbert Warrington and W. C. Foster made negatives for the picture and their excellent team work was highly complimented by officers and directors.

Filming "Ready Money," with Edward Abeles in the role of Steve Baird, was produced at the Jesse Lasky studio under the direction of Oscar Apiel. Theodore Roberts was cast for Mike Reardon, mine foreman; James Neil for Jackson Ives, the counterfeiter; Fred Montaigue for Morgan, the mine operator; Howard Hickman for Mr. Tyler; Dick LaReno for Capt. West, the secret service employe; Jane Darwell for Mrs. Tyler, and Bessie Barriscale for Grace Tyler.

Among the big scenes for this photoplay will be one of a New York cafe on New Year's Eve, and that of the explosion of a mine. The company film, "The Man from Home," with Charles Richman, under the direction of Director General Cecil DeMille, at Esconeta, where the Siberian scenes, in which H. P. Carpenter as Ivanoff, escapes when a premature explosion kills the guards, were being made. It was in this location that scenes were secured for "The Virginian," a recent Lasky release.

GENERAL FILM PROGRAM

"The Fable of the Honeymoon That Tried to Come Back." (Essanay. Wed., Sept. 9.)—Like all others of the George Ade comedies this is full of genuine laughs, funny enough to be shown at all houses. The husband does come back in this picture, but the way the couple separated is more than humorous.

"As We Forgive Those." (Lubin. Two reels. Wed., Sept. 9.)—An absorbing picture. The only fault is that the action is a little too slow in parts. The man, who is about to shoot another he thought stole his wife and child, is stayed by hearing the Lord's Prayer. Explanations follow and the first man is enlightened of the innocence of his friend. Joseph W. Smiley, John Smiley, Lilie Leslie and Justina Huff are the principals.

"The Man in Black." (Selig. Wed., Sept. 9.)—The kleptomaniac is lured into aiding a real criminal, but when a blow on the head restores her whole reason, she betrays her partner. Not much interest is aroused by this picture. The acting seems below standard.

"The Band Leader." (Vitagraph. Wed., Sept. 9.)—The old story of the suitor held in disfavor by the father, is made uproariously humorous when his profession is leader of the park band and the other suitor is a pie manufacturer. Wallie Van, Hughie Mack, William Shea and Lillian Herbert are the main people in the cast of this exeellent comedy.

"Too Much Uncle." (Vitagraph. Two reels. Sat., Sept. 5.)—Quite an old story, but handled in a delightful manner by Ralph Ince and eharming Anita Stewart, assisted by Billy Quirk, Albert Roccardi and Lucille Lee. The consequences that result when a young man passes his friend's wife off as his own, deceiving his old uncle, are naturally humorous, but when the parts are enacted by this accomplished east, they are even more so.

"A Fool There Was." (Lubin. Sat., Sept. 5.)—Evidently the man who coneeived this comedy-drama is a born woman hater, as its moral is "Don't get married." Funny in parts, but loosely put together.

"For The Cause." (Biograph. Sat., Sept. 5.)—The old story of the daughter of the foreign spy sent to obtain the secret of an invention from an American citizen, and being unable to fulfill her mission, having fallen in love with him. In this case it ends tragically, as seeing her love is not returned she kills the man and then takes her own life.

"Broncho Billy, the Vagabond." (Essanay. Sat., Sept. 5.)—In whieh Billy performs another charitable deed by warming the hearts of the cowboys toward a destitute family. A pretty and somewhat pathetic story.

"Pawn Ticket No. 913." (Selig. Sat., Sept. 5.)—Perhaps the most valuable lesson that is taught by this picture is not to patronize the sign of the three golden balls, and then again for a man not to force his unwelcome affections on their object. A fair drama, but rather vague.

"When the West was Young." (Selig. Two reels. Mon., Sept. 7.)—This drama, which sets forth a beautiful story, could easily be condensed, making an excellent one reeler, as it stands it contains too much padding. The young Western couple lose their little child, but they find solace by adopting the child of another couple who were killed by Indians. The action is absorbing.

"Love, Loot and Liquor." (Biograph. Split reel. Mon., Sept. 7.)—On the same reel with "Bluebeard the Second." The stenographer is thought to be locked in the safe, and after a wild auto ride the employer and his son reach the office only to find a hobo in her place and she gone for the police. Laughable from start to finish.

"Bluebeard the Second." (Biograph. Split reel. Mon., Sept. 7.)—On the same reel with "Love, Loot and Liquor." An amusing burlesque in whieh Bluebeard seeks "September Morn," but fails to find her until a deteetive poses as that lady and routs the villain from his throne.

"The Unwritten Play." (Vitagraph. Mon., Sept. 7.)—A charming drama played by Dorothy Kelly, James Morrison and George Cooper. Paul, a playwright, falls in love with the star of his new piece. Later it develops that Paul is the son of the man who grossly wronged the adopted father of the girl. But because of the great love of the two children, the old man refrains from taking his desired revenge.

"Brandon's Last Ride." (Vitagraph. Two reels. Tues., Sept. 8.)—An all-absorbing story of the West, played by Alfred D. Vosburgh, Robert Grey, Margaret Gibson and Bertie Pitcairn. Jim, the steadfast friend of Alice, the husband of Tom Brandon, keeps his knowledge of her husband's crime from her until after his death, when it beeomes known and Jim and Alice are married.

"A Typographical Error." (Selig. Tues., Sept. 8.)—A pleasant comedy-drama in which the error consists of printing "divorced" for "devoted," precipitating a quarrel between husband and wife; but all ends happily.

"The Cricket on the Hearth." (Biograph. Two reels. Tues., Sept. 8.—It would be a pleasure if one could see more pietures of this caliber which is adapted from the story by Charles Dickens. The sets are all in keeping with the time and the plaee, England. The story is that of a sailor, thought lost, who returns just in time to keep his sweetheart from marrying the heavy, who very nicely reforms in the end. There is a little padding, but on the whole it is a very pretty picture, well acted.

"The Belle of Breweryville." (Lubin. Tues., Sept. 8.)—A comedy of the slapstick variety, put on by Romaine Fielding. There is not much plot, but quite a bit of chasing, which is funny at first, but tiresome toward the end.

"Bill's Boy." (Essanay. Tues., Sept. 8.)—A dramatic offering in whieh "Bill's boy" is saved from the crooked life of his father by the help and advice received from an old partner of his parent. Many tense moments in this picture, which is played by Bryant Washburn, Harry Mainhall and Richard Travers.

"Picturesque Quercy." (Pathe-Eclectic. Split reel.)—Remarkable photographs in natural colors of the ancient roads that twine around lovely hills and through peaeeful dales about this old and historic city and then pass over quaint stone bridges with high towers that guarded the approaches from the raids of enemies. On the same reel with "A Study of Birds."

"A Study of Birds." (Pathe-Eclectic. Split reels.)—All kinds of birds and all sizes and conditions are photographed in this interesting educational film. The pretty spotted oriole, the strange looking lapwings, the many colored sharp-billed woodpecker, the shrill magpie, and many others are eaught in their nests or in treetops, or perehed on telephone wires in these colored pictures. "Picturesque Quercy" completes the reel.

"Doubles Bring Troubles." (Hartigan-Eclectic.)—Diverting and clean comedy of the fun that arises from the striking resemblance of two men, one of whom loses his clothing to a tramp, and then puts on his double's outfit and is mistaken by all for him. Of course all is straightened out satisfactorily when the double appears on the scene of action.

"The Shell of Life." (Lubin. Fri., Sept. 4.)—Even if the old and haeknеyed instrument for plot complications, the mortgage with the threatened disasters that follow in its wake in stories, does have an important part in this drama, there is sufficient novelty in the ending to redeem the picture. The girl hands over the robber to the sheriff in order to get the reward to pay off the debt, and the next moment she learns that the robber has already paid the mortgage for her.

"The House That Went Crazy." (Selig. Fri., Sept. 4.)—An uninteresting and dull burlesque that brings in all sorts of ingenious and perplexing devices for labor-saving that after the first two or three scenes becomes extremely wearying. W. E. Wing is responsible for this latest attempt to discover something absolutely new that will succeed in provoking laughs.

"The Barrel Organ." (Vitagraph. Fri., Sept. 4.)—A monkey proves the hero of a dangerous fire that threatens the lives of a father and his little girl. He carries up the rope by which they escape. The reward that the thankful father hands over compensates for the broken barrel-organ, and paves the way for a marriage between the Italian girl who owned the organ and the hobo who relieved her by grinding it.

"Sheep's Clothing." (Edison. Two reels. Fri., Sept. 18.)—Made from the novel of Louis Joseph Vanee now appearing in The Associated Sunday Magazines, this picture has all the mystery and the gripping suspense for which this author's stories are noted.

"Jim's Vindication." (Edison. Sat., Sept. 19.)—Exceptionally strong drama of the returned convict, introducing a new phase into this somewhat overworked theme. The wife does not receive the released prisoner with open arms, and they do not go off together to begin life afresh in a new country. He has to prove his manhood before she will acknowledge him, and the play presents the difficulty that he has in establishing his innocence.

"Generals of the Future." (Edison. Split reel. Mon., Sept. 14.)—Pictures of our cadets at West Point going through their various drills at the graduation exercises. The ideal beauty of the Academy's location appears in all its glory when the battalion of eadets is on dress parade, before the background of the encircling hills. On the same rell with "Buster Brown."

"Buster Brown on the Care and Treatment of Goats." (Edison. Split reel. Mon., Sept. 14.)—This popular little fellow has stepped out of the pages of the comic section onto the screen. The antics of the goat and Buster's dog, Tige, will prove enjoyable to all in need of hearty laughter. The reel is completed with "Generals of the Future."

"Making a Convert." (Edison. Tues., Sept. 15.)—This is a very valuable eduеational film, made in connection with the Public Service Railway company of New Jersey. It is a warning against carelessness in getting on and off street cars, in crossing tracks, and in general against the many accidents that could be avoided if a little foresight were exercised.

"Whiffles' Double." (Pathe-Eclectic. Split reel.)—Whiffles is in love with a certain young lady. A shoemaker comes to the lady's house, and he looks so much like the lover that he is mistaken for him in disguise. The shoemaker tries to explain, but he is getting deeper and deeper in the mire, when Whiffles himself prances in. On the same reel with "Kashmir, British India."

"Kashmir, British India." (Pathe-Eclectic. Split reel.)—This out of the way part of India is revealed to us through Pathe's camera man. The pictures are in those exquisite natural colors that have made the Pathe company famous. The skill which people of this country attain in their weaving and embroidery is really marvelous.

"The Moonshiners." (Kalem. Two reels. Wed., Sept. 16.)—The same old story of the mountain clans that make illicit whisky part of the time and carry on feuds the rest; of the pretty mountain girl, daughter of the clan, and of the revenue officer that falls in love with her. More excitement than usual is added by introducing Indians.

"The Chief's Love Affair." (Biograph. Split reel. Thurs., Sept. 3.)—On the same reel with "Love and Hash." The idiotic appearing chief of police falls in love with the gunman's sweetheart, and the consequence is a lively chase. This is a laughable picture.

"Love and Hash." (Biograph. Split reel. Thurs., Sept. 3.)—On the same reel with "The Chief's Love Affair." The chief loves the daughter of the proprietress and when a rival looms up, all the fun imaginable, some of it a little vulgar, takes place in the kitchen and dining room.

"When Macbeth Came to Snakeville." (Essanay. Thurs., Sept. 3.)—A fine comedy played by Victor Potel, Margaret Joslin and Harry Todd. Slim's wife, after seeing a farcical performance of Macbeth, dreams about it to such an extent that she attempts to murder the leading man of the company who is staying at her hotel. Many laughs produced by this.

"The Upper Hand." (Vitagraph. Thurs., Sept. 3.)—William Humphrey, Leah Baird and Rex Hitchcock enact this absorbing picture. The mistreated wife of a gambling inebriate falls in love with a young Easterner. In the husband's death the hopes of the other two are realized.

"The Face in the Crowd." (Lubin. Two reels. Thurs., Sept. 3.)—An excellent detective drama played by L. C. Shumay, George Routh and Velma Whitman. A clever detective after many adventures and untiring efforts brings the law down on the Vice Ring. The attention is not lost once. The finale ends rather abruptly and the expected climax does not appear, but this comes far from marring the picture.

"The Eyes of Genius." (Kleine-Cines. Two reels. Tues., Sept. 8.)—A well played and highly entertaining number. Excellent photography and scenes. The gypsy model of the artist and her chief plot to rob him. Their way seems clear, as the artist is in love with her, and later is stricken blind. But the conspirators are foiled by a devoted admirer of the artist, who by her heroic deed wins his heart.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

"Love and Graft." (Joker. Sat., Sept. 19.)—Bob Vernon, Max Asher, Louise Fazenda and William Franey create a barrel of fun in this reel. Bob is in love with the police captain's daughter, and after a sidesplitting time he gains father's consent.

"The Scarecrow's Secret." (Frontier. Sun., Sept. 13.)—In which the dishonest son of the rancher is apprehended by the money he stole being found in an old scarecrow. This drama is hardly clear in parts. W. Rogers, Dolly Larkin and Joe Franz are the principals.

"Cattle." (Frontier. Sun., Sept. 13.)—The old Westerner doesn't like his daughter's choice, but he soon changes his mind as he falls in love with the young man's mother. Not as good as Frontier can do.

"The Danger Line." (Nestor. Wed., Sept. 16.)—A white slave story, made by the McRae players: Clifford, Bainbridge and Marie Walcamp. A dissatisfied girl goes to the city. She is saved from the "living death" by a reformed crook, who later becomes the secretary to a millionaire and marries her.

"The Troublesome Wink." (Nestor. Fri., Sept. 18.)—One of the best of the Nestor productions. Eddie Lyons, Victoria Forde and Lee Moran appear. Wife is inflicted with a malady which causes her to wink at all passers-by; the wink is accompanied with a jerk of the head. Due to this she has all the men in town running after her. Hubby arrives on the scene and is furious; he threatens all with a pistol. Everyone will be in an uproar before matters are straightened out.

"Son." (Eclair-Universal. Sun., Sept. 20.)—A pretty story but containing little out of the ordinary. The son, who is a gambler, is reformed through the unconscious good actions of a good-for-nothing.

"Fruits and Flowers." (Nestor. Fri., Sept. 25.)—One of Al Christie's best, with Eddie Lyons, Victoria Forde and Lee Moran in the principal roles. The two office clerks are rivals for the hand of their employer's daughter. Each plays a funny trick on the other, and they are both refused.

"The Half Breed." (Nestor. Wed., Sept. 23.)—Moosejaw, the half breed, nurses a grievance against Johnson, a ranch owner. While he is away he captures his wife, leaves their little child in the house and sets fire to it. The ranchmen arrive in time to save the wife. The child had escaped from the house. William Clifford and Marie Walcamp play the leads in this highly wrought Western melodrama.

"A Joke on the Joker." (Crystal. Tues., Sept. 15.)—Vivian visits her aunt and uncle, and plays many a joke on them until finally they get even. Later while two aspirants for her hand and duelling to determine who shall claim it, she elopes with another. There are really two separate stories to this comedy, which will create many laughs.

"Trapped in a Closet." (Sterling. Mon., Sept. 14.)—Two burglars are the ones to get trapped, and then the closet is carried off on a moving van. They are chased by the comical Sterling police, who are mounted on quadrapeds of various species and sizes. A great amount of shooting occurs.

"The Broken Doll." (Sterling. Mon., Sept. 7.)—A comedy acted by the Sterling juvenile players. Billy almost precipitates a quarrel between two lovers, and nearly breaks off his own engagement. But things are settled in a happy way. An amusing offering.

"A Gentleman from Kentucky." (Victor. Two reels. Mon., Sept. 14.)—Not quite as good as most pictures in which J. Warren Kerrigan and Vera Sisson appear. The old Kentucky colonel is adverse to his daughter's marriage to a gambler and forbids it, but when the gambler proves his worth by assuming a blame for a murder supposed to have been committed by the other, and when he is finally exonerated by the confession of the real culprit, his aspect changes.

"A Modern Melnotte." (Powers. Two reels. Fri., Sept. 18.)—A very good drama along lines somewhat out of the ordinary. The disappointed lover passes his groom off as an English lord, and introduces him to the object of his affections. Some time later the two are married and then the other lets the truth be known, expecting to humiliate the girl. But she considers the matter and discovers she loves her groom. To cap the climax he inherits a fortune. Edna Maison, Ray Gallagher and Bert Hadley are the principals.

"Tempest and Sunshine." (Imp. Two reels. Thurs., Sept. 3.)—This does not make an exceptionally good picture for the simple reason that it is too confusing, too many sub-titles are necessary to explain the action, and then much has to be left to the imagination. Dorothy Phillips and Alexander Gaden play the leads. Tempest is engaged to Wilmot when she meets another man who becomes engaged to her sister, Sunshine. She falls in love with him, and after her lover's death she almost succeeds in breaking off their marriage by her plotting, but finally fails.

"The Cross." (Rex. Sun., Sept. 20.)—A pathetic story with Pauline Bush and Ray Gallagher in the leading parts. The sister tells her companion at the convent how she once loved a man of noble birth, but how he was forbidden to marry her. Later she had the opportunity of saving his child from death but failed to do so, because of a hatred in her heart. When through with the tale she dies, and a vision of the child is seen forgiving her.

"Daisies." (Rex. Sun., Sept. 13.)—The ancient story of the neglected wife and the husband absorbed in his business. He, however, is made to see that there is more in life than finance by the threatened desertion of his wife and his ruination through the market. All will admire the work of Rupert Julian and Elsie Jane Wilson.

"Her Bounty." (Rex. Sun., Sept. 13.)—A fien drama and a very appropriate Sunday release. The settlement worker falls in love with the sweetheart of a poor girl. He forsakes his old love and proposes to her, but she, thinking not of herself but of the other woman, refuses him. Pauline Bush and Lon Chaney are the principals.

"In and Out." (Sterling. Mon., Sept. 21.)—Max Asher and William Franey, well-known stars of the Joker Company, make their debut in the Sterling forces here as a grocer and a butcher. They come to odds over a game of cards, which leads to quite a fight. The opposing factions unite forces for a while to attack the police, and then go at it again among themselves. A reel of laughs.

"The Mysterious Mystery." (Victor. Two reels. Fri., Sept. 11.)—Florence Lawrence takes two children to see this identical picture. While in the show she is interrupted by a gentleman seeking her, and it develops she is mistaken for a lunatic. But matters are at length straightened out and she returns to the show. Was her experience really in the picture or was it not, is the mystery. Matt Moore assists, and puts some fine comedy in the film.

"For His Father's Life." (Eclair-Universal. Sun., Sept. 13.)—The greater part of this reel is employed in illustrating what a wonderful horseman Joe Ryan is. This young man has to ride to a town several miles away to procure some medicine for his father. He makes part of the journey by rail, but most of it on his horse.

"The Mistress of Deadwood Basin." (Rex. Mon., Sept. 17.)—A drama of the north with Robert Leonard, Ella Hall, Alan Forrest and Harry Carter in the leading roles. The drinking boss of the lumber camp is at length put to shame by the other men after he has wounded his employer, a young girl. Highly entertaining and an excellent one reeler.

"A Rose of Yesterday." (Frontier. Sun., Sept. 20.)—An abrupt ending leaves this picture in rather an unfinished state. Dolly shoots and kills her sweetheart instead of an outlaw as she intended.

"The Man Who Was Misunderstood." (Imp. Thurs., Sept. 17.)—King Baggot and Arline Pretty play the leads. The old fiddler when asked to tell his story informs his listeners of his past life. How he was once a prosperous man in love with a girl who was admired by all the young men, but a treacherous rival ruins him in the eye of his sweetheart by making her believe him dishonest. And he marries her, but the other meets him again and kills him. Good race track scenes in this picture. The murder seems entirely justifiable.

"The Scarecrow and the Chaperone." (Universal Ike. Tues., Sept. 15.)—A group of gir's chaperoned by an old lady visits the West. The chaperone is adverse to the cowboys' attention to her charges at first, but when she gallivants with the hotel keeper matters are settled agreeably to all. Quite a few laughs in this, but it is rather inferior.

MUTUAL PROGRAM

"Our Mutual Girl." No. 34. (Tues., Sept. 7.)—This is the first of Carolyn Wells' much heralded scenarios written to show "Our Mutual Girl" at her best. Contrary to expectations this one is serious. It concerns a little child that Margaret takes into her home, and promises to take to see Rose O'Neil and her kewpies. But this visit will be shown in the next.

"In Danger's Hour." (Thanhouser-Mutual. Fri., Sept. 11.)—Whenever a dog shows his faithfulness and rescues his little master or mistress from fire or drowning, the sympathies of the audience are aroused and held, no matter how commonplace and obvious the story may be. In this picture a fine collie saves his little owners from drowning. This happened once in McGuffey's "Third Reader," but it is a whole lot more interesting than many of the supposedly novel plots that now and then are set forth.

"The Little Mischief." (Thanhouser-Mutual. Sun., Sept. 6.)—Everybody loves a sweet and cunning little girl, and if she is mischievous and gets into all kinds of innocent badness, we just like her all the more. That is just what happens in this picture. The little girl breaks statuary, daubs herself all over with jam, and floods the bathroom when the cook puts her in the tub to get clean. But she is sweet just the same, and mother has to kiss her when she comes home.

"A Tragedy of the North Woods." (Domino. Two reels. Thurs., Sept. 17.)—The death of the factor leads to an investigation by Sargeant Allen. He discovers that the assistant factor committed the crime, because of the other's cruelty to his own wife and child whom he stole from him and then deserted. The sargeant refuses to arrest him on hearing this story. This picture holds the interest throughout.

"'No-Account' Smith's Baby." (Gay-Bee. Two reels. Fri., Sept. 18.)—In which the little shoes of a bandit's baby is placed in his pocket by his wife before he is about to hold up the stage, causes the man reformation. This is a strong human interest picture, and contains many pathetic scenes and situations.

"A Tale of the Northwest Mounted." (Broncho. Two reels. Wed., Sept. 16.)—Rapid and absorbing action marks this release. Excellent scenes. Gates, a member of the mounted police of the north, is sent to locate a liquor smuggler. He discovers that it is Jaques, who after incriminating Gates is finally caught. Fine melodrama.

"In the Nick of Time." (Reliance. Two reels. Sat., Sept. 5.)—Along the same old plan of the railroad pictures, in which somebody always opens a switch, prevents a collision, saves hundreds of lives and wins the everlasting gratitude of the officials of the road. This time the hero is an operator who loses his job on account of drink, and, happening into an abandoned station, seizes the opportunity that knocks him over the head, almost.

"Mabel's Latest Prank." (Keystone. Thurs., Sept. 10.)—This brisk and lively comedienne sets up to a married man, into whose home she comes as a serving-maid, and takes no pity whatever on the poor, embarrassed fellow. The consequences make good fun for all but the jealous wife and the dispirited husband.

"Mabel's Blunder." (Keystone. Sept. 10.)—When Mabel sees her beloved young man driving off in an automobile with another young lady, of course she is naturally upset and perplexed. The affectionate way in which this same young man treats this same young lady is really more than she can bear. But the young lady is only an innocent sister, so the laugh is on Mabel. She endures it gracefully.

"The Rounders." (Keystone. Mon., Sept. 7.)—Charles Chapman and Roscoe Arbuckle are the fun provokers in this farce, but it is really the rough handling that they receive from their wives when they return home in a slightly intoxicated state that makes the merriment.

"The Motherless Kids." (Beauty. Tues., Sept. 8.)—Everybody likes to see children happy, and so everybody will like this picture. Two little children have the jolliest time of their little lives when they go to spend the day with a neighbor by mistake. But they have such a good time, and brighten up the whole place so, that they come to the house for good, and their father comes with them, to get a new wife and a mother for them.

"The Cocoon and the Butterfly." (American. Two reels. Mon., Sept. 14.)—An illegible picture that attempts to reveal the dangers that surround the girl who works in large stores. But no manager would last long in this day and time that makes love to every pretty girl that comes into his establishment. This manager does, and that is why the picture is impossible.

"The Mirror." (American. Wed., Sept. 16.)—The mystery of this picture is laid bare, but yet the thing is puzzling because the spectator cannot tell which is the real veiled woman when two arrests are made. If the explanation were not cut off so shortly perhaps the picture would be clearer and seem nearer completion.

"The Only Way." (Beauty. Tues., Sept. 15.)—A well-acted picture with Marguerite Fisher and Harry Pollard playing the leading roles, but it follows along hackneyed lines. The girl's fiance is a sailor and goes off to sea; he is ship-wrecked and the girl marries another man. The sailor turns up years afterwards and the husband gives up his wife to her first love and he disappears.

"Sis." (Princess. Fri., Sept. 11.)—The inescapable rural comedy again without any new touches. The fun depends upon the awkwardness and uncouthness of the country girl and the country bumpkin, but this is so exaggerated and carried to such an extreme that it must be looked upon as burlesque, and as this will give pleasure to a great many.

"Mutual Girl, No. 35." (Reliance. Mon., Sept. 14.)—The second scenario by Carolyn Wells, but there isn't very much Carolyn Wells about it. Margaret takes the little child of the last picture to Rose O'Neill to see the kewpies. She then goes to Gloucester and pays a visit to John Hays Hammond and his family, and takes in the fishing sights in the port.

WARNER'S FEATURES

"The Bloodhound." (U. S. Film Corp. Three reels.)—Rather inferior for this brand, but the fault is in the story, not in the acting, which is as good as ever. Lawrence Peyton, Natalie De Lonton and Leon D. Kent head the cast. The scene of action is in the west, and the riding is as usual in these pictures of the best sort. The plot is quite complicated. The sheriff loses his wife at the birth of her child. Years later, an old enemy turns up who ruins his daughter. The sheriff pursues him to the mountains and there captures him. He is married to the girl on his death bed.

"The Puppet's Dowery." (Milano. Three reels.)—A very pretty story is told in these three reels, but it contains little real action and could easily be condensed. The photography is excellent. Madeline loses her husband through an accident. She leaves her child with a friend and then marries a rich count. The child is thought to have been lost in a fire, but years later the mother finds her in the care of an old puppet maker. The ending is happy for all concerned, as the old man receives a large sum of money for the invention of a new variety of puppet.

NEWS WEEKLIES

"Mutual Weekly, No. 89."—A number of excellent pictures constitute this week's release. Of course, there are several timely war views. Among them are: The mobilization of Canadian troops; the Royal Scotch Highlanders are shown leaving for the front; the Sixth Brigade, Canadian field artillery, entrains at Montreal. Other views consist of the "Star Spangled Banner" celebration at Atlantic City; a California "alligator farm"; a view of the steel bridge across the Snake River, Washington, and women in a peace parade in New York City.

"Animated Weekly, No. 131."—Among the eleven pictorial views of live current events shown in this release are many taken in various parts of the world, the United States, France, the Canal Zone, and England. One, in this country, deserving particular mention shows a vast shipment of grain made at New York City for Great Britain. An Indian Sun Dance at Manitou, Colo., brings back recollections of the days when this country was not so thickly settled and our Western frontier was anything but a place of peace and quiet. Other interesting pictures complete the weekly.

"Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 55." (Selig. Mon., Sept. 7.)—Outside of the war news, which is still as entertaining as ever, perhaps the most interesting topic in this weekly are scenes portraying the various branches of the International Labor Unions at work and pictures of some of their leaders.

Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 54. (Selig. Thurs., Sept. 3.)—Mexico, although she has been chased from the front page of the newspapers, is still alive in this week's films. The transfer of the government to the Constitutionalists in Mexico City forms the news from that section of the world. The European conflict holds its place, and the Belgian troops are seen departing to the war, and an interior view of an improvised hospital follows. The formal opening of the Panama Canal by the U. S. steamship Ancon is the other subject of the reel, and a very entertaining one as it is supplemented by various scenes in the Canal zone.

ECLAIR—SCIENTIA

"Milan, the Capital of Lombardy." (Eclair. Split reel. Sun., Sept. 6.)—Of course, when Milan is mentioned everyone thinks at once of the great cathedral, built entirely of white marble and requiring four centuries to complete. The pictures that the Eclair photographer has succeeded in making of this splendid human achievement are among the most beautiful that have been shown. The flying buttresses, the magnificent tracery, and statuary which adorn every niche and corner of this Gothic edifice are seen from every angle of approach.

But other beautiful things in the Lombard city are laid bare to our eyes, the Public Gardens, the Arch of Peace, La Scala Square, and the monuments to Garibaldi and Victor Emmanuel I.

"An Arabian Fantasia." (Eclair. Split reel. Sun., Sept. 6.)—This completes the reel which began with "Milan." The "Fantasia" is something like the medieval tournament, only far more riders take part. The fair women journey on camels from far and near to applaud the daring of their heroes, but they conceal their beauty behind thick veils.

HEARD IN THE LOBBIES

The equipment of the Bonita Theatre in Gadsden, Ala., has been sold by the sheriff to the Walker Electric Company for $600. There is a lien on the property for rent amounting to $900 and it must be sold again for the rent.

The Gadsden Amusement Company, which was organized a year or two ago, owned the equipment. Mismanagement is said to have been the cause of its failure to succeed.

"Cabiria" has closed a two weeks' engagement at the Atlanta Theatre. The picture was brought to Atlanta by William Oldknow, the well-known Atlanta motion picture promoter, and its success had been phenomenal.

The capacity of the Atlanta Theatre has been taxed to its fullest extent each afternoon and night and one of the most notable features of its presentation is the tremendous number of patrons who have gone more than once to see the remarkable spectacle.

The commission in charge of the Kentucky exhibit at the Panama-Pacific Exposition has closed a contract with the Essanay Company for not less than 15,000 feet of motion picture film showing the industrial, commercial and civic greatness of the Blue Grass State. Funds are now being raised for the erection of the Kentucky building at the exposition where the films will be shown.

Sam W. B. Cohn, who took a lease upon the Empress Theatre, Spokane, Wash., opened it Sunday, September 6, as a picture house, intending to show feature films only.

The Empress was the original home of Sullivan and Considine vaudeville there and formerly was known as the Washington. It is on Riverside avenue, the main business street, and is well located. It has a seating capacity of about 1,100.

The larger motion picture productions are rapidly gaining favor in the smaller cities of Illinois outside of Chicago, and exhibitors are now, probably more than ever before, booking big features. In some places certain days are set aside by exhibitors when the larger productions are shown. The admission price is increased and plenty of advertising brings the business.

An illustration of how the smaller city exhibitors are arranging for special features is shown in the announcement just made by Manager McMullen of the Colonial Theatre in Joliet, Ill., who has just closed a contract with the Famous Players Company for some of their biggest film productions.

Thomas O'Dowd has opened a new motion picture theatre in the Bremer Building at Hillsboro, Ill. The theatre is excellently arranged and O'Dowd promises a first-class line of pictures.

The American Theatre, formerly the Kenyon Theatre, on the North Side, Pittsburgh, has opened for the winter season. Vaudeville and motion pictures are to be used. The Universal service has the call.

Motion Pictures in Singapore

The Cinematograph Has Been Popular in That Distant Quarter of the World for Many Years—High Admission Prices

THE popularity of the cinematograph in the East, says the American Consul at Singapore, in a recent issue of the "Daily Trade and Consular Reports," is yet another instance of the adoption of western ideas by a people whose supposed indifference to the march of civilization has become a theme for poets. This latest form of relaxation has become firmly established in the favor of Singaporeans, and those in a position to know predict a great future for it in the colony.

Singapore was by no means behind the rest of the world in its adoption of the bioscope. Many years have elapsed since the cinematograph was first introduced to local residents in a small show on High street, and the surprise of the native population when they witnessed pictures moving and performing acts which seemed more in place in actual life can much more easily be imagined than described.

There are now five picture houses in this city, and in a short time more will be added to the number. Some of the buildings used for motion picture purposes are ordinary frame structures with thatched roofs.

An interesting feature of local cinematograph theatres is the way they cater to the poorer native classes, by arranging benches made of planks at the rear of the stage or screen. Admission to this part of the house is 10 cents local currency or about 5.7 cents United States gold, and it is not unusual to have nearly a thousand people witnessing the pictures from the other side.

They are compelled, of course, to view the picture backward, but it seems to make little difference, as they do not read the English description and receive their sole amusement from the attractiveness of the picture itself. This feature is depended on by the theatres for a goodly portion of their revenue. Admission to the front part of the building seems exorbitant compared with similar shows in the United States, the general price being $2 local currency, or $1.14 American.

A luxuriously appointed building has been opened in Orchard Road. It is quite modern in construction, with balcony and boxes, but the custom here is rather the reverse of that in America, in that the ground floor is for the natives, while the first balcony with tiers of boxes on each side of the house and also a row of boxes at the rear of the balcony provide the first-class accommodations. The scale of prices for this new theatre is $1.14 (United States) in the boxes, $0.85 in the balcony, $0.28 for the ground floor, and $0.14 for the space behind the screen.

As stated, in addition to the five more or less modern picture houses here at present, the construction of another one, larger and more elaborate in design than those now in use, will soon be begun. This will be the new Alhambra, which will be erected by Mr. Tan Cheng Kee, who is also the owner of other picture houses.

Through the instrumentality of this consulate an order has been placed with an American firm for the chairs with which to equip this new theatre. This is the first instance where the United States has been favored for such furniture, the order being for 800 or more chairs, some of which are of an expensive type.

RELIANCE DIRECTOR LOSES CAMERA

Director Fred A. Kelsey, of the Reliance, lost his trunk containing all his camera effects from his automobile in producing "For the Last Edition," a newspaper story featuring Irene Hunt.

In watching a crowd of newsboys scrambling for the papers in front of a Los Angeles newspaper office, one of the youngsters received a broken arm during the struggle. Kelsey picked up the boy, placed him in his machine, and rushed at full speed for a hospital.

During the run the trunk containing the camera and a portion of the picture-taking equipment became dislodged from the machine and fell to the street.

Kelsey missed the trunk when he returned to the hospital.

The trunk was found by another autoist, who, noting the R. & M. address on it, telephoned the studio.

Kelsey then got in touch with the studio. He rushed to the home of the autoist who picked up the trunk.

An hour later Kelsey had secured his trunk, however, and was busily engaged in his duties of directing the production.

The New York "Sun" of Sunday, August 16, in a long and interesting article, discusses the chances which the camera men will have in the present European war, and expresses the opinion that the difficulties in the way of securing first-class pictures will be greater than ever before, because of the hostility on the part of the combatans toward both photographers and correspondents.

It states that if first-class pictures are secured it will probably be with such a telephoto lens as the new one of Pathé Frères, which can take a photograph of a man at 600 yards so big that he will fill the plate.

As the limit of the ordinary lens is about 200 feet, the possibilities of the new lens are understood when it is remembered that most of the fighting is done at ranges of 1,000 to 400 yards. So with a lens capable of taking pictures at from 600 to 800 yards the operator could get pictures of the hottest fighting.

Standard Film Gets World Fair Picture Rights

Obtained Concession to Topical and Commercial Films—Will Have Five Acres Occupied by Studios and Complete Developing Plant

THE Standard Film Corporation, New York, has secured the exclusive motion picture concessions of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, which will be held in San Francisco during 1915.

This concession is considered by the exposition officials to be one of the most valuable and important in connection with the big fair, and The Standard Company only secured it after keen competition with other companies. The concession includes the exclusive rights to photograph, produce and manufacture motion pictures of every kind and description within the exposition grounds and under the auspices of the Exposition Company.

It also includes the exclusive rights to exhibit photoplays at the exposition as well as the commercial and topical picture privileges.

A TRACT of ground approximating five acres in area in one of the most desirable locations on the main amusement street in the concession district will be used by the company as its headquarters during the fair period. On this space will be erected a large first-class theatre which will seat upwards of fifteen hundred people at one time.

At this theatre will be shown the first runs of the best features that can be secured anywhere and the projection and presentation of these subjects will, it is promised, be on a par with the most advanced methods of the day. Several innovations will be introduced in this respect. The balance of the ground will be occupied by a huge amphitheatre and producing studios, stages and yards, where several producers and their companies will be kept busily engaged in the production of pictures.

Large and completely equipped laboratories, carpenter shops, property rooms, scene docks and dressing rooms will be included.

Stanly H. Twist engineered the deal. Mr. Twist is well known throughout filmdom and his efficient work in putting through the deal has caused much favorable comment.

WORLD TRIP FOR SCENICS

The United Photo-Plays Company, Chicago, has organized a scientific exploration and human interest expedition. This expedition, headed by Dr. George A. Dorsey, of the Field Museum, the world-famous curator of anthropology, sailed probably on August 20 from San Francisco, headed direct for China.

Dr. Dorsey will be accompanied by two expert camera men. He is a world traveler of note, and knows where to get the highest type of material. The trip will be as follows:

Chicago to San Francisco, Tahiti, New Zealand, Australia, with a trip into the interior among primitive blacks, New Guinea, Solomon Islands, the Celebes, Java, Sumatra, Borneo, China, Siam, Burma and India.

This journey will occupy from eight to twelve months, and he believes that during that time it will be possible to secure photo films unparalleled in amount and interest.

How Jones Became a Live Wire Exhibitor

Once He Was a "Dead One," Then He Got Wise, Opened up the House He Had Closed, and Now Is In Clover

JONES isn't his real name but we'll call him that because he doesn't want folks to know that he was once "a really and truly dead one."

For just thirteen months Jones enjoyed the distinction of owning the only residential theatre in the exclusive section of the city of ———. The four hundred seat monopoly earned not a little above actual operating expenses and netted Jones a snug profit. Without opposition he prospered.

The inevitable soon happened. Two new modern houses were erected in the same section of the town, although at some distance from the house of Jones. Business went to smash almost immediately, and for three months the house made a frantic struggle for existence. Every conceivable method was tried to forestall the failure but the crash came and Jones hung out a for-rent sign.

The theatre remained idle for three months, reopened and is again doing business, but in a little different manner.

Recently the writer paid Jones a visit to ascertain just how things stood and to inquire about the future prospects of the house.

"Yes, I opened her up again," Jones said, with a wistful smile, "and this time we are going to stay open."

"Are you netting as much as you did before your neighbors took the field?" I asked.

"You just bet we are," he snapped. "In fact, we are doing better than we ever did before."

"How do you account for it?" I asked, whereupon he eyed me with a quizzical look which quickly died into a sheepish smile.

"I want the story for THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS, I added, "that is, if it is something more than mere luck that spells this real comeback."

"Well, young man, it isn't luck and it isn't because the other fellows are getting into a rut. It's a good story and I believe your readers can profit by it.

"I got thinking it over, decided to buy a special screen, renovate and open up the house for a last attempt before trying to convert it into a store.

"After announcing my opening date, my program, etc., I started out with two hundred passes in my pocket determined to make a house to house visit and see that the passes were given personally to the lady of the house.

"My line of talk was something like this, 'Madam, we have just installed a new screen in the J——— Theatre, have redecorated, renovated and placed the house in first-class condition. We have arranged an unusually good program and want you to be our guest some evening this week.'

"At every house I received a warm welcome and in almost every instance the reception opened the way for a chat on motion pictures in some one of its phases. In many instances apologies and explanations were forthcoming.

"Could anything have been better? Just what I wanted to know and getting the information without asking the question point blank.

"Well, sir, after I had gone about four blocks I knew just why I had failed before and was alive to the fact that my reopening was going to be a failure unless I made some radical changes.

"One woman told me that her family was very musically inclined and that our piano was out of tune and they just couldn't sit through a performance and listen to it. Another said that she stopped her girls from going down to the J—— Theatre because there was always a bunch of rowdies hanging around in front of the theatre.

"A young man who came to the door told me that he was an operator and that he couldn't see how we could "get by" with the dark and hazy pictures we were showing. I hired him.

"Why, you wouldn't believe it if I showed you all the complaints registered against my perfectly good theatre. They were so many and so varied that I just about had my hands full making alterations and changes for the opening.",

"Then you really mean to say that your old patrons have shown you how to run your house successfully," I asked.

"Just that exactly! I learned from the old crowd just what I couldn't see for myself. I learned their likes and dislikes. I discovered why they were going six and eight blocks out of their way to see pictures when they had a house right here in their own neighborhood and no other than by personal visit could I have successfully secured such valuable expressions from those whom I am trying to please."

On my way out he stopped near the cashier's booth and directed my attention to the fact that after the sale of each ticket the cashier said, "Thank you." Then pointing to a little frame on the front of the booth, he said, "Read that."

Our Motto—Quality—Not Quantity. Four Reels—No More

So there is how one man spelled success, and is still spelling it.

SUCCESS WITH SLIDES

The Bijou Theatre, Broadway, New York City, is showing the Novelty Slide Company's "War News Pictorial." The Warner's picture, "Exiled," combined with these slides, proved an excellent drawing card at that theatre.

HIS PICTURES FULL OF ATMOSPHERE.

Milton H. Fahrney, playwright, actor, producer of successes in the golden days of the "legitimate" drama, and now principal director of the Centaur Film Company of Bayonne, New Jersey, was a protege of Augustin Daly, and a co-worker with Richard Mansfield.

MILTON H. FAHRNEY

In 1908 David Horsley induced Mr. Fahrney to enter the film business. He was successful from the start, and in the six years which have elapsed has produced many elaborate and successful features.

Mr. Fahrney is chiefly noted for the atmosphere he gets into his pictures, for the remarkable action he gets out of big ensembles, and for the care and judgment he uses in selecting locations and outdoor light effects. It is said that Mr. Fahrney has never directed a picture which was deficient in technical quality.

IMPERIAL WILL RELEASE ONE A WEEK

The first comedy release of the Imperial Motion Picture Company, New York, "Raising Funds at Squattlyhunk," contains a notable cast and should prove a success. The players are:

John G. Kelly, Weber and Fields comedian; Crimmons and Gore, of "Officer Kate," a Vitagraph production; James B. Mackie, of "Grime's Cellar Door"; Master Martin, Ben Mears, Herbert Tracy, Edith St. Clair, Elsie Steele, Henry and Clay Grant. Arthur Donaldson is the director of the company.

The new release will contain one hundred scenes, in one reel. The next comedy brought out by the company will star Lew Dockstader. The company expects shortly to release one play a week.

JOHN BOWERS
Who starred in "The Family Cupboard," at the Playhouse, New York, and who will appear this season in a great Broadway production, whose natural acting has won him a tremendous following—known as the "handsome matinee idol."

MISS BEULAH POYNTER
Who toured the country as the star in her own productions, "Lena Rivers," "The Hoosier Schoolmaster," "The Little Girl That He Forgot," etc., etc., and whose latest play is being produced by Wm. A. Brady—a woman who is known as the queen of emotional drama.

"TALKING FILMS" IN JAPAN

The Japanese have their own particular kind of "talking pictures." In nearly every one of the one hundred theatres in Tokio, as well as all through the empire, the dialogue of the screen actors is repeated by a man and a woman who stand on each side of the screen, and follow the course of the play.

Another peculiarity of these theatres is that a part of them is set aside for those of the audience who still adhere to the ancient Japanese custom of sitting on the floor. Most of the patrons, however, use chairs, as we do.

The motion picture houses of the Cherry-Blossom Empire are well built, and adapted from the best European houses. The films are usually of European origin, but American influences are making themselves strongly felt, says the correspondent of the "Courier Cinematographique," of Paris, who reports these interesting facts.

Native plays and actors are coming into the field, too, and one European producing company is planning to put out a series of Japanese dramas and comedies, with native casts.

Texas League Plans Film Exposition

Will Be Held in Connection with State Fair, Last Two Weeks in October—Exhibitors Are Greatly Interested

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Dallas, Tex., Sept. 9.

THAT the film business has reached great importance is indicated by the fact that a big motion picture exhibition is being planned for the State Fair of Texas, which runs for the two weeks, beginning with October 16.

Every phase of the motion picture industry is to be shown and it is believed that the exhibition will open the eyes of the people of the southwest to the magnitude of this business, as nothing else would that could be done in this part of the country. The State Fair of Texas is attended annually by over 800,000 people, most of whom visit the Fair to see and learn.

The show will be under the direction of the Motion Picture Trades Club and the Motion Picture Exhibition League of Texas.

James B. Kelly, a well known local motion picture man, who returned recently from New York, succeeded in creating much interest in the Texas State Fair exhibition among the film producers of the East. Mr. Kelly is enthusiastic over the prospect for a successful moving picture exhibition, and says that the interest being displayed by the motion picture interests is bound to make the show a big success.

The exhibition proper is to be a showing of all features of the moving picture business, and it is planned to also bring to Dallas in connection with the exhibition some of the leading screen actors and actresses of the country. Local film men are very much interested in the proposed exhibition and declare it will do much toward stimulating interest in the business.

The action of the Motion Picture Trades Club and the Motion Picture Exhibition League strikes the right note.

The Fable of the "Dog" Town

and it will take something strong enough to blow the roof off to make 'em stir their stumps and go to a show. And if you don't strike ten we'll be holding a financial inquest over you in six months."

Jimmie was the son of the leading physician in the town. He was young and well liked, he had social prestige, and, what is better, he had sense.

He did not start his show in an airdome down behind the livery stable, or in a building that had held every failure and bankrupt that had ever come to town. He built a splinter-fire new airdome on Main street, right jam up against his uncle John's bank.

HE built the airdome right. He had comfortable seats; he imported a good operator from the city; a number of his friends, young fellows whose fathers were the richest men in town, acted as ushers. The daughter of the mayor sang a song between reels. The orchestra that had played for the Ideal Dancing Club made music. Jimmie sold tickets and managed things, and from the date of the opening night the town of Verity began to lose its reputation.

Jimmie packed the airdome. He made friends with the church crowd; he gave them special nights. He had benefits for every lodge and secret society in town, and he put great wads of money in his uncle John's bank.

That fall a firm of architects in the city drew plans for the most complete and up-to-date theater, with steam heating plant, and perfect ventilating system. The theater was built; it is now in its second year, and it is one of the best paying propositions that the town has.

There are hundreds of towns like Verity in this country. There are veritable gold mines, two or three of them, in every county, waiting to be developed. But they must be managed right; they must be managed as Jimmie Maxwell managed his show.

MANY theaters in small towns fail because they are managed by the former proprietor of the pool hall, or some fellow who is no more fitted to be the manager of a picture show than he is to be the Bishop of Canterbury, some chap that surrounds himself with a bunch of hangers-on of the young loafer type, and the show fails, as it deserves to do. But let a good level-headed man get in the game and there is no better paying proposition in the country for the capital invested.

There is a regular harvest of dollars waiting for you, Mr. Exhibitor, if you are wise and willing; but there are a number of things you must know and do. The small town exhibitor must carefully choose his program.

There seems to be an impression that anything is good enough for a country town show. It is good enough for them if it is the best the exchange has, not under any other consideration. There is only one crowd to draw from in the country town, and you must draw from it again and again.

THERE is another thing the exhibitor must know, if he is from the city. He must get the "rube" idea out of his head. The people in small towns may not be as familiar with elevators, tall buildings and street cars, but they are far from the kind of straw-chewing, awkward louts the vaudeville performers portray them to be.

The people in small towns are perhaps better informed in art, literature and music than are their city cousins, because they have more leisure to read and study.

If many an exhibitor, instead of staying in the city and trying to put his competitor out of business, would pull up stakes and go to a good live small town, and give the people a good live program, he would soon be putting down stakes in the bank, and feeding himself and his family steaks of the porterhouse and tenderloin variety.

"BORN AGAIN"

(Hector Film Corp.—Five Parts)
REVIEWED BY WILLIAM RESSMAN ANDREWS

THIS photoplay is a starring vehicle for Beulah Poynter, who is cast for an emotional role taxing all of the handsome young actress's histrionic ability. It gives her an excellent opportunity to display a wealth of physical charms, particularly in the boudoir scenes, which cannot help impress the dullest eye. Indeed, the realism of many, like the incident in the bedroom of the farmhouse where the heroine, dressed in a "fetching" nightie, plays with a demure feline and inadvertently thrusts a shapely limb from the flimsy garment. will keep any one from falling asleep.

The spectator gets a glimpse of the tinsel world of the magic name in the ears of the uninitiated—"behind the scenes." He sees the star's dressing room and is treated to a little rumpus between the beautiful leading lady repulsing the bold manager who offers a contract with a big salary—accompanied by a Mephistophelian leer.

The leading lady is saved from an awful dilemma by the timely offer of marriage of a wealthy young man, who unfortunately does not live up to her conceptions of a model husband. The benedict celebrates his happiness by inviting a party of lively friends, and their Bachanal conduct proves too much for the bride. Several hundred feet of the first reel are devoted to the carousal of the bibulous guests, and they show the effects of looking upon the wine when it is too red with all the abandon such a scene must have to convey a deep lesson on the evils of alcoholic indiscretion. This lesson is doubly enforced by a repetition of similar episodes in this part of the drama, thus driving home the sermon implied in the behavior of the visitors.

This same method of impressing other strong parts of the plot is employed in the sickroom scenes where the heroine, laboring under the stress of tense emotion brought on by nerve racking experience, tosses hysterically on the bed.

In "Born Again" this employment of the old fashioned mode of getting absorbing interest—the use of dramatic contrasts for obtaining surprises—has proved very effective. A repetition of events can probably be used with telling effect only in scenes like the ones standing out in this play on a firm basis of startling realism.

"THE LURE OF LONDON"

(Warners—Three Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

AS the title clearly implies, this is a film of English manufacture, but the title does not tell us that the picture is a well played melodrama, not so far out of the ordinary to be startling, but absorbing nevertheless.

It is one of those pictures which refresh one greatly, simply because it lacks the conventional villain of the deep-dyed-in-the-wool variety: in fact it might be said that the story contains no villain whatsoever, if the purely jealous and later relenting actions of a woman may be passed over as a natural outcome of circumstances. But the absence of the heavy does not detract from the charm of the picture in any way at all; if anything, it adds to it.

Ivy Close, a young English actress, is introduced to American motion picturegoers in this film, and if her appearance in this picture is a criterion of her future acting, we sincerely hope that she may be seen again, in as charming a role as she plays here. She is assisted by a competent cast, which will help the picture to much of its success.

Even though the story is rather conventional, it is well built, and will always hold the interest, it seems, no matter how many times it be seen. The action, or a good part of it, transpires in some of the more prominent streets of London, a merit which will not fail to be appreciated by the onlookers. To see scenes of any strange or familiar city is always a welcome pleasure, and to see them with a story being enacted on them is still a greater pleasure.

It Is NOT Impossible

Some theatre owners have the idea that it is not possible to use the only perfect screen on a full drop. That idea is wrong. You can use the on any size drop and with the employment of a little mechanical skill have the screen adjust itself automatically to be absolutely perpendicular to the angle of projection.

This will positively eliminate the "Keystone" effect so often seen.

It will also screen your pictures in perfect proportion.

Ask us to tell you how you can do this yourself at a trifling expense. Then you, too, can join the ranks of those who

"THE PRICE OF CRIME"

(Albuquerque-Warner's—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

ALBUQUERQUE'S specialty has for a long time been stories dealing with the wild Indians of the West, their unprovoked uprisings and bloody results, but here in this picture the old order changeth, and a picture which might come under the head of a society drama is set before the public, although quite a bit of the action transpires in the West, where the wonderful riding of the attaches of the company is brought into play with sensational results.

THE VICTIM OF CROOKED PLAY.

Dorothea Farley is again the author and star of the picture, directed by Gilbert Hamilton, and supported by Jack Conway, the good-for-nothing husband. H. A. Livingston, Pete Poierer and Wanna Browne play smaller parts, and a large cast of supporting supers appear.

Although Mr. Conway plays the unhappy part of the good-for-nothing husband, who, although he is greatly neglectful to his wife, one cannot but help feeling a little sympathy for this man, so loving are his actions toward his mother, who, no matter how much he neglects his wife, always receives his greatest attention.

So great is the love of the wife for her husband, even though he utterly neglects her, that she succeeds in keeping the knowledge of his numerous crimes from his lovable mother, who blindly believes that her son is a perfect man.

Not very often in the present day do we see that sight which was once worked to death—the train holdup. Its return in this picture after many months of absence affords somewhat of a new spectacle, so long has it been neglected. It is effected in a sensational manner, as the sister of the outlaw rides her horse alongside the train, grasps the end of a car and lifts herself from the horse, then proceeds to the front of the car and holds up the engineer, bringing the train to a halt.

By a mere coincidence, Jack's mother and wife are in the train, and he has joined the band of outlaws, which is pursued by the sheriff and his posse after the holdup, and captured. The son has been mortally injured by a severe fall, which is exceptionally realistic, and he is brought to his blind mother where he breathes his last. Later the mother dies, never knowing that her son was a scapegrace.

HEARD IN THE LOBBIES

The Trent Theatre, on North Warren street, Trenton, N. J., on of the largest theatres in the city, has returned to "legitimate" productions, eliminating the motion picture business, which it found profitable during the summer season.

The Airdome, opened some time ago by S. Milton Shelton, on South Montgomery street, Trenton, N. J., around the corner from the State Street Theatre, the largest motion picture house in this section of the state is closed. The management says it was the intention to discontinue business with the advent of September, but no announcement was made to this effect, the place appearing dark Monday night, and not reopening. Billboards and parapbernalia have been removed.

Several hundred persons nightly attended the free motion picture display given in Newark, N. J., under the auspices of the State Society for the Relief and Prevention of Tuberculosis, three nights recently. The exhibition was given on the grounds of Public School No. 3 at Third avenue and John street, and consisted of eight reels of pictures showing means of curing the disease and preventing its spread.

"Cabiria" has closed a most successful appearance of two weeks at Moore's Strand, Washington, D. C. This production has received high praise from official, educational and professional circles of the National Capital. The "Littlest Rebel" followed, holding the screen of the Strand for a week's duration. This was mounted in a military setting with appropriate music by an orchestra of twenty.

B. F. Jones, Jr., manager of the Independent Film Exchange at Wheeling, W. Va., reports business in that section as being first class.

R. A. Morrison, recently engaged as road man for the Famous Players Film Service in Pittsburgh, is meeting with success all over his territory. He states that the pictures have made a hit wherever displayed, and that he has obtained a considerable number of contracts.

"Caught in a Tight Pinch" is the title of a society comedy-drama to be released by the Beauty Company on Sept. 22, featuring Margarita Fischer and Harry Pollard, who have often proven their ability as fun-makers.

One of the most realistic scenes taken in the studios of the American Company is that which will be seen in "Jail Birds." William Garwood takes a dive through the window of a court house after being found guilty of manslaughter in the picture.

An unusually funny picture under the name of "Count Noahcount" has just been completed by Jack Blystone, Universal Joker director. Something of its comical nature may be gleaned from its title.

Robert Leonard, director and leading man of one of the Universal Rex companies, has completed a one reel melodrama called "Little Sister," which is said to be an exceptionally gripping story. He has also just finished a comedy-drama entitled "Her Aunt's Will."

"'Lucille Love' is saving my life, financially speaking," says Manager J. H. Cory, of the Star Theatre, Laurel, Neb., writing to Manager Van Husan, of the Laemmle Film Service Co. in Omaha, asking terms on the Trey-o'-Hearts feature.

Maurice Fleckles, general manager of the Laemmle Service Co., visited in Omaha recently just before starting for Europe to locate his wife. He traveled with the Laemmle party to the war countries.

Motion pictures will play an important part in the reproduction of the Battle of New Orleans, which is to be refought on the identical battle-ground on January 8, 1915, the one hundredth anniversary of the original battle in which General Jackson defeated the forces of his opponent, Packenham.

Arrangements have been made with various producing companies in the United States to film the event so that it may be preserved. The celebration of this famous battle will be held under the jurisdiction of the Louisville Historical Society and will bring to an end the hundred years of peace between this country and England. The scenario is now being prepared by Stanley Clisby Arthur, chairman of the committee on motion pictures for the Historical Society.

The only trouble which this end of the picture caused was the gathering of small crowds, but these may easily be overlooked. Good photography prevails throughout; one or two of the street scenes give the appearance of being a little bit blurred, but doubtless the renowned London mists were responsible for this small fault.

Daisy, while a little child, wanders away from home, is found by a poor family, and brought up in their midst. Later she becomes a famous dancer and is loved by an artist, who in turn is loved by the girl's sister. When the former two are engaged, she in a jealous rage tries to harm the girl by casting her in a dark light in the eyes of her lover, but when her true relation is made known, she speedily makes amends and all ends well.

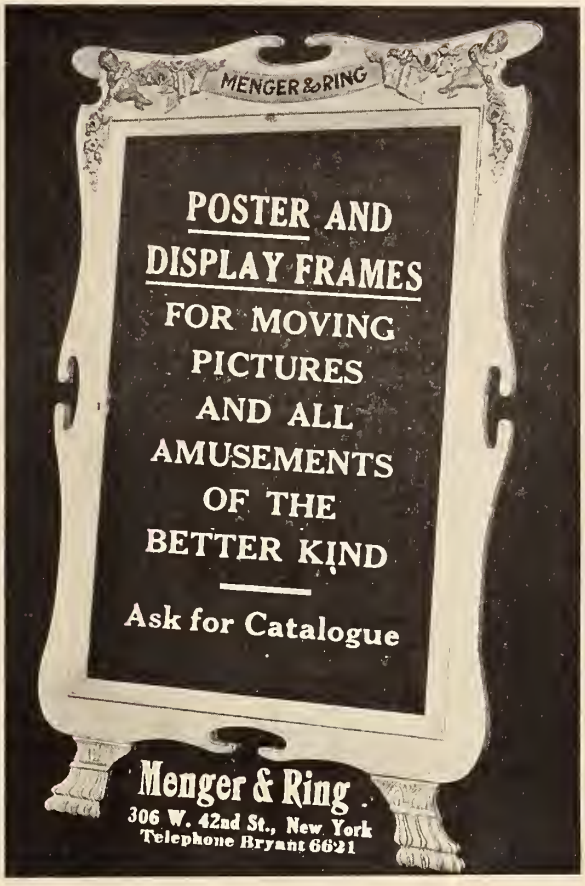
ANIMATED SONGS



Imperial Motion Picture Co., New York
Releases for August:

A Fool There Was.
Take Me Back to Frisco Town.
Shadows.
Father Came Home with the Milkman in the Morning.
Dear Old Girl.
What a Wonderful Love That Would Be.
When I Dream of Killarney.
Down in Our Old Country Town.
In the Valley of the Moon.
Let's Go Back to Sweetheart Days.
Just a Black Sheep That Strayed from the Fold.
Let Us Kiss and Make Up Again.
There's a Lonesome Little Girl in a Lonesome Little Town.
She Was My Dad's First Sweetheart.
Down Where the Old Road Turns.
Push It Along.
She's Just a Bird in a Gilded Cage.

No matter how thrilling a story one may read, interest is not sustained if poor type, poor paper and poor press work make hard work for the eyes. It's the same with motion pictures. A clear picture is as necessary as a good scenario.

Because the basic product is right, the clearest pictures are on "Eastman" film. Look for the stencil mark in the margin.

William Hiller, a German motion picture producer, is a new member of the Los Angeles colony—being connected with the Los Angeles Film Corporation in charge of production. Mr. Hiller was on a tour of the world and had just reached Los Angeles when he learned it would be impossible for him to return to Europe.

He immediately sought employment. For the past two years he was connected with the Deutsche Kinnematographische Gesellschaft as director and playing leads, and prior to that time was with many of the leading manufacturers of the Continent.

It is the intention of the Los Angeles corporation to make five and six-reel pictures, with a release to be sold by States right each month. Production of the first picture will begin shortly. One reel of comedy will he made each week.

Mrs. Chauncey Ward Badly Injured

The Marshal Neilan Kalem comedy company was at San Pedro recently where another sea picture was made. In this Ruth Roland was featured.

Mrs. Chauncey Ward, character woman for the Sterling Motion Picture company, was badly maimed when a Hollywood-Los Angeles street car on which she was riding, collided with a heavy truck, and it will be several weeks before she will be ahle to appear before the camera. Lon Chaney, of the Universal,' passed a moment after the accident happened, and by experience gained in motion picture accidents rendered first aid to the injured.

The comedians and comediennes of the Al Curtis Joker Universal company have been filming a hurlesque of the European war, "The Battle of the Nations," which in a comedy way will show the far-reaching effect of the great international conflict.

Murdock McQuarrie has been featured in a one-reel heart interest story, "Foundlings of Father Time," filmed hy Director Charles Giblyn at the Universal studio.

Completes Latest "Trey o' Heart"

Al Cristy and his funmakers recently made for the Joker Universal hrand a Pullman car comedy, "All Ahoard."

"Disillusioned," a one-reel Victor picture made by Jacques Jaccard, with J. Warren Kerrigan and Vera Sisson, makes an appeal for all to go back to the simple life. George Periolat plays a good character part.

In "White Roses," Rohert Z. Leonard directs and plays the part of a circulation manager of a hig city daily, opposite Ella Hall as a little street newsgirl. The story is of a heart interest nature and the picture consists of one reel.

The Wilfred Lucas Gold Seal company making the "Trey o' Hearts" serial, has completed the ninth installment.

on this most timely and momentous Feature Film pronounced by the leading Exhibitors and Critics to be one of the greatest and most exciting Films ever presented to the American Public.

Read what the "Billboard" says:

There are war pictures and war pictures, but the Cosmofotofilm Company has to offer in "England's Menace" a photo-play dealing with this subject that is far beyond the average "timely" picture now being exploited. Although the production is of unusual dramatic strength, there are no actual scenes of carnage or battle, the entire play is ominously "silent" in this respect, which adds to its gripping power. In short, it is a feature that should go big in any theatre, as it will stir up patriotism in the breast of anyone, regardless of nationality.—Billboard, 9/12/14.

(FIVE REELS)

A Comedy-Drama Adapted From the Novel of

EDWARD EGGLESTON

To make a refined and spontaneous comedy of the first order.

To avoid the exaggerated and hysterical type of melodrama, the unnatural in acting and the improbable elements of plot—this has been the aim of the producer.

"THE HOOSIER SCHOOLMASTER" has been translated into a dozen languages. In every paragraph there is a sob or a smile. In every foot of the film there is a tear or a laugh. It is a story of everyday men and women. All great stories have been such.

We will negotiate with first-class houses on a commission basis. We will sell to reputable state-right buyers. Write or wire.

BOSWORTH

Presents

"The Pursuit of the Phantom"

Written and produced by Hobart Bosworth

The writing end of the motion picture business is by no means new to Mr. Bosworth, although this is his first five-reel drama. He is the author of over a hundred photo plays of great success, and is a master not only of photo play technique, but of the creation of strong dramatic plays of extraordinary screen value.

"The Pursuit of the Phantom" is an absolute innovation. In it Mr. Bosworth is supported by Courtney Foote, the eminent English actor.

Volume X SEPTEMBER 26, 1914 Number 12

Facts versus Statistics

ISN'T it about time to lay aside forever the professional statistician's estimate of the number of motion picture theatres in the United States and Canada, and to accept the number which the trade itself has found and knows to be correct?

Why not?

Who is to gain by the inflated figures except the prospectus writer for the unprincipled stock jobbing concerns which unhappily are bound to arise in the field—or the magazine writer building his ridiculous tales of motion picture riches—or the publication laying absurd claims to exhibitor circulation?

THESE few will gain—so long as gullibility lasts And these many will lose:

(1) The advertiser who pays a high rate for a trade circulation two or three or five times greater than it possibly could be;

(2) The innocent investor who is led to believe that a big, eager market will at once absorb the producer's pictures;

(3) The prospective exhibitor who naturally estimates that with so many theatres in the country, his own town must have too few in proportion and who therefore rushes into a new business to his own disaster and to the hardship of the established theatres.

THE gravest danger that confronts the motion picture industry today—as every solid business man in it is fully aware—is the danger of inflation.

Inflation in production honey-combed the automobile industry two years ago, to the point of possible disruption, and so will the motion picture business suffer unless these wild tales of big markets and big profits are promptly squelched.

EVERY manufacturer of pictures and equipment knows full well—and to his cost—that the statistics of 18,000 picture theatres in this country and Canada are utterly and expensively misleading.

He isn't interested in statistics; he is interested in his business.

If the new manufacturer circularizes such a list, he will get back several thousand envelopes marked "NOT FOUND."

His follow-up circulars will each result in an alarming percentage of returns marked "REMOVED," "LEFT NO ADDRESS."

In the end he will acquire a list of theatres actually and fairly established in business, less by forty or more per cent. than the statistical number.

THEN he will find out more facts that the professional statistician does not know—for instance, that in the big cities, many so-called exhibitors do not read English; that many so-called theatres are little more than "holes-in-the-wall," and painted fronts; that their owners do not even claim to be exhibitors, or ask that recognition.

Every manufacturer knows these facts.

So do most exhibitors; and every organizer of national, state and local exhibitors' organizations knows these conditions so well that the statistician's wild guess excites downright derision.

THE trade publications know these facts—or ought to. It is a sad commentary on their circulations if they do not.

There is obviously, then, but one answer, and that is—that they have never even attempted to secure a paid and genuine circulation.

Otherwise they would—as obviously—know what the circularizing manufacturer finds out.

What must be thought of a publication which gravely assures the advertisers of an exhibitor circulation as large as the statistician's guess?

THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS' estimate of 7,000 purchasing exhibitors—which simply means exhibitors genuinely in business and regular buyers of pictures and high-class equipment—is based upon a subscription-getting campaign so thorough that its cost was upwards of $20,000.

No statistician's figures were used—but lists loaned by leading manufacturers and by exchanges and local dealers all over the country.

It is safe to say that there was not a single exhibitor in the country who was not systematically called upon by mail or through field representatives.

The results were of exceeding all-around interest, and we saw fit to publish them in the interests of the trade.

Over one hundred field correspondents assisted in the work, and their findings were published in the "Market Review" number of The Motion Picture News of July 11.

This report, covering over forty pages of the issue, was the first detailed exhibitor report ever compiled in the history of this industry.

WE found out many things besides a statistician's numerical estimate.

We found, first, that this was utterly unfounded; and then we found that numbers, anyway, had little to do with the situation.

Everywhere the fly-by-night theatre was dying out in relatively large numbers, as the modern, well-built, well-equipped, well-managed theatre made its appearance and won its inevitable success.

One modern theatre is worth more to the industry than one hundred of the other kind—and to the public, and to itself.

The other is merely a unit for the statistician; it has neither dependability nor stability.

It is a draw-back to the swift upward growth of a splendid industry.

It represents too often an era we would rather forget. It is an unfair, often an illegitimate competitor of the honest, substantial exhibitor.

SEVEN THOUSAND purchasing exhibitors, running high-class up-to-date theatres turning back into the industry at least $35,000,000 a year constitute the backbone—and a very big one—of this industry.

Few other industries can boast such a retail outlet. These theatres feed the public taste for pictures.

There is no room for many more.

The present number will increase not much in number, but rather in size and in equipment and in better service to the public.

IN closing, if anyone doubts that the News' estimate of the real number of picture theatres in the country is far wrong, these excerpts from letters by men who know are illuminating.

This from an executive of one of the largest licensed companies:

> In answer to your letter of the 7th inst., after reading carefully over the enclosed article, I have come to the conclusion that you have just about hit on the right dope.

This from a leading executive of one of the three big consolidations:

> By exposing the "bull" in moving picture advertising, you have smacked the bullseye squarely.
> I drank in every word of your very frank and clever statement. My only regret was that you did not print it in type four feet high, studded all the way up and down with diamonds, so that it would compel the attention of the modern careless and thinkless reader.
> Go right on with it. Smash at it week after week and you are bound to compel the respect of every prospective advertiser.

This from a foreign producer:

> I wish to congratulate you upon the well-worded and convincing argument relative to the circulation of The Motion Picture News.

THIS from the advertising manager of one of the oldest and best known producing companies (licensed):

> Facts, not fancies, are the only testimonials of a legitimate business.
> Your "straight from the shoulder facts" are the first legitimate argument carrying any weight ever set in type in a modern picture trade journal.

This from a prominent exhibitor and league officer:

> Your conclusions as to the number and kind of exhibitors coincide exactly with my experience as a league organizer throughout the country.

William A. Johnston.

"LEGITIMATE" AND FILM MANAGERS JOIN HANDS AGAINST TAX

Special to The Motion Picture News

Milwaukee, Wis., Sept. 15.

THE local motion picture men and the theatrical men of this city have joined hands in a fight on the proposed war tax on theater tickets or films.

Working with Congressmen Cary and Stafford they are bringing every influence to bear to defeat the proposed tax.

A petition signed by Sherman Brown, of the Davidson Theater; Charles Newton, of the Shubert Theater; James Higler, of the Majestic; J. W. Whitehad, Gayety; Rod Waggoner, of the Club, and Charles H. Phillipps for the local picture men, was forwarded to Washington.

This is the first time that the theatrical men and picture men have ever gotten together for their mutual benefit. The move is of unusual significance, as heretofore the theatrical men and the exhibitors have been rather antagonistic, especially in the last few years since the pictures have made such great inroads into the "legitimate" and vaudeville fields.

But now that their interests are threatened they forget the old feud, and it would not be surprising to see some sort of combination effected between the Theatrical Manager' Association and the Milwaukee Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association as the outcome of the tax agitation.

A plan of this sort should not present many difficulties as Thomas Saxe, of the Saxe Amusement Company, is a member of both organizations, and their interests are becoming every day more identical.

That the two organizations would if they reached some sort of an agreement to work together exert a tremendous power through the newspapers cannot for a moment be denied, and both sides could gain much through it.

FEATURES POPULAR IN ARIZONA

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Phoenix, Ariz., Sept. 12.

AS an indication of the inroad of the feature on the regular service, the Arizona theater with an off the path location where afternoon performances are out of the question, has hung up a new record since the introduction of the Paramount service.

The theatre started the feature program some time back in the very hot weather, and despite the handicap of location and the heat, has built up a splendid trade with the Famous Players releases.

Harry Nace, who is handling the house, is one of the veterans of the business in Phoenix, and was far-sighted enough to secure the Paramount when it was begging for a customer in this section. The service lends itself easily to newspaper advertising.

NEW YORK AND LOS ANGELES AUTHORITIES OPEN CAMPAIGN AGAINST WAR FILMS

Commissioner Bell Takes Action to Suppress Exhibition of Pictures He Considers Likely to Excite Race Feeling Among Metropolitan Audiences—Subjects Must Be "Neutral," He Declares—Pacific Coast Censors Objects to Military Scenes Not Actually Taken Abroad

WITH an officious zeal that would be ludicrous if it did not have a serious aspect inasmuch as the action indicates a tendency to meddle with matters with which they have no moral right to interfere, the municipal authorities of New York, San Francisco and Los Angeles have placed curbs of various degrees of harshness on war films.

The San Francisco police led in this arbitrary interference with the business of motion picture theatres two weeks ago. Following their unwarranted move in a matter which can be best regulated by the exhibitors themselves, the Los Angeles censor board, organized in a misguided reform spirit, issued a fiat against pictures which are supposed to arouse race prejudice.

Then New York City, for once the tail-ender in any movement, good or bad, followed in the wake of the lesser communities.

WITH a touching regard for the peace and quiet of its cosmopolitan sojourners, the License Bureau on September 16 issued orders for the suppression of supposedly inflaming war pictures.

Commissioner Bell has assumed that producers of motion pictures and exhibitors are unable to see where their own interests lie and the nature of their obligations to the public they serve.

The effect of this action on the part of the New York and Los Angeles municipal authorities upon the censor boards of the country who have not adopted an official attitude toward war films may well come in for consideration at this moment.

PENNSYLVANIA and Ohio have not been heard from as yet, but the utterances of the mayors of one or two Ohio cities indicates that an announcement of some kind may be expected from the Columbus headquarters of the Buckeye censors before long.

If the censors move at all, it is likely to be in a direction prejudicial to the dealers in war films and it behooves the members of the trade liable to be thus affected to take counsel on the issue.

Films in New York City must remain neutral during the European war. That is, they must not display pictures showing favoritism toward any particular country, and between pictures there must not be any demonstrations or set pictures tending to stir up race feeling

The foregoing is the sense of orders issued by License Commissioner George H. Bell to fifty inspectors who began an investigation of complaints to the effect that in many of the motion picture theatres offensive pictures are already being exhibited.

THE inspectors from the License Department have also received information that many film makers, having sounded public sentiment, are now staging mimic battles, which will be ready for the nickelettes and the theatres in a few weeks.

These pictures are supposed to represent actual scenes from the battle-front in France, Belgium and Eastern Prussia, according to the commissioner.

"From what I can learn," said Commissioner Bell, "many of these pictures promise to be very one-sided. I cannot say just now which countries the film-makers are giving the best of the bloodless conflicts. At any rate, the pictures, if shown the way they are being prepared, will stir up a lot of feeling.

"Some of the pictures referred to are being made in this city. Others will come from France, England, and even Germany.

THE German pictures will show the Kaiser's troops chasing the allies all over the lot. Those from France and England will demonstrate a bayonet charge by Highland, Irish and English troops, with coattails of German infantry for a background. I believe this is against the spirit of neutrality as proclaimed by President Wilson."

Los Angeles Censors Object to "Fake" War Films

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Los Angeles, Sept. 14.

LOS ANGELES board of censors, at a meeting Tuesday, unanimously decided to condemn all motion pictures purporting to be actual scenes of the war in Europe which are not genuine.

The action was taken by the board following a request by A. P. Tugwell, owner of the Globe Theatre at Jefferson street and Central avenue, president of the Exhibitors' League of Southern California, vice-president of the National Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors which was merged with the Exhibitors' League of America at the Dayton convention, and who is also a member of the board of censors.

According to members of the board the ban will not extend to genuine motion pictures of scenes of real battles, military formations, or other pictures of the European struggle which the military officers of the respective country have permitted to be made and exported.

"IT will be best for exhibitors to attempt to aid rather than retard the attempt of President Wilson to maintain a strict neutrality," Mr. Tugwell said, following this action of the censors.

"So-called war pictures are likely to inflame the minds of some of the people making up the motion picture audience, and to my knowledge pictures of rulers have been hissed when projected on the screen.

"The President has advised against discussing the war, and I do not believe any make-believe European war picture can be shown that will not favor one or the other side of the great conflict.

"On the other hand, genuine pictures will be of a very educational nature and serve to show the horrors of war, which will be a great lesson."

NEW GEORGIA THEATRE UP TO DATE

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Atlanta, Ga., Sept. 16.

A new motion picture theatre which, it is said, will be one of the finest in the State, will be opened in Milledgeville, Ga., about the middle of September.

Edmund Reid, manager of the Colonial Theatre, is owner of the new picture house. A special lighting and ventilation system will be installed, and the theatre will be sufficiently large to accommodate 250 persons without crowding.

STRAND LAUNCHES ADVERTISING WAR

Manager Harold Edel, of the Strand, Buffalo, N. Y., has commenced a large advertising campaign this fall to let patrons know of his excellent attractions at the low admission price. Large advertisements in the papers and billboards will be used in this campaign.

BAGGOT IN SERIES OF RURAL PLAYS

"The Silent Valley," a two-reel feature recently released and featuring King Baggot in an ultra-rural role proved such a success that the Imp Company has decided to release several other film dramas showing Mr. Baggot in the rough and ready.

KING BAGGOT

"The Mill Stream," a two-reel feature will be the next along this line. Most of the settings for the play were taken at Smithtown, Long Island, N. Y., where Mr. Baggot with his company has been motoring every sunny day.

George Lessey is the director of the piece.

ECLECTIC FIRM A WINNER

Manager Roberts, of the Hudson theatre, Albany's newest addition to the film world, struck a winner when he showed "On the Border," an Eclectic film featuring Elsie Esmond.

As a result of her popularity the Hudson theatre was crowded at every performance, and there were enough people turned away to fill the house a couple of more times. It is believed that Mr. Roberts could have shown the film for three days, doing capacity at every performance.

ADMISSION PRICE RAISED TO TWENTY-FIVE CENTS

Special to The Motion Picture News

Omaha, Sept. 16.

W. E. White and his wife of Beresford, S. D., were in Omaha the other day.

They report that the exhibitors in Beresford have raised their prices to fifteen and twenty-five cents admission, with a straight admission of twenty-five cents for special features.

Union Musicians Call Strike in Trenton, N. J.

President of the National Union, However, Visits the City and Demands that the Dissatisfied Members Go Back to Work

Special to The Motion Picture News

Trenton, N. J., Sept. 17.

THE Musical Union of Trenton made an unsuccessful attempt to coerce the Taylor Opera House and the State Street Theatre, the largest of the city, combination houses, by pulling out the orchestras during the show.

The demand was that each house should put in two extra men, increasing the size of the orchestra from four to six men, at salaries of $19 each.

The managers received assurance one day that they would be given two weeks in which to comply with the ruling of the local organization, but the following day, when the houses were filled from pit to dome, William Carman, president of the local, delegated Fred Ruhlman, a member of the executive committee, to call the men out.

The men were taken from the houses and the audience was left without music for the vaudeville acts and pictures. Both houses were fortunate enough to have people playing who could perform on the piano, and with actors in the pit furnishing a musical program, the show went merrily on.

Public sentiment was against the move, and Frank Crothers, president of the National Union, upon learning of the injustice of the action, visited this city, conferred with the managers of the two houses and the members of the union and demanded they return to the orchestra pits and give the house managers two weeks' time to decide the matter, as they had at first agreed.

The members of the orchestra in each house are against the move, it is said, to increase the number of men, and claim that it is unnecessary and that it prevents any possible increase in their own salaries.

They also declare that picture houses are not unionized and that the members who are in control of the Trenton local earn their livelihood in barber shops and potteries, and in professional life they have taken up music as a side line, as it were, making extra money at night by playing at sociables and in restaurants, commanding the union wages.

A prominent member of the organization declared that the men who are not making a livelihood at music are gambling with the positions of the men who depend upon theatre work for their living.

Because of this difference between the men and the managers of the house the rivalry that has existed between the State Street Theatre and the Taylor Opera House is now broken, and the managers, Herman Wahn, of the State Street, and Montgomery Moses, of the Opera House, have formed an alliance which will prevent, it is said, the union from winning the fight.

The managers are willing to allow an increase of $2 per man, if the orchestras are kept at the present size. Should the unions refuse to agree to this, the houses will fight the question at issue, it is said.

In the meantime, the small theatres in the city are on an anxious seat, as it will mean death to a number of them if they are forced to employ union musicians.

Springfield, Ill., Theatre Raises Prices

And the Patrons of the Grand Pay the Increase with Good Grace—"Home Made" Pictures Prove Popular

Special to The Motion Picture News

Springfield, Ill., Sept. 15

SPRINGFIELD film devotees now have a theater devoted exclusively to showing the larger motion picture productions. That they appreciate it is attested by the large attendance.

Messrs. Adolph and George Kunz, proprietors of the Grand theater, have switched from the usual three-reel program and have contracted for the new Paramount releases.

They have increased the admission price from five cents to matinee prices of five cents for children and ten cents for adults, and night prices of ten cents for children and fifteen cents for adults, the night prices going on at 7 p. m.

Their first offering, Mary Pickford in "The Good Little Devil," drew big crowds for the two days it was shown. "The Lost Paradise," with Henry B. Warner and Catherine Carter in the leading roles, followed the Mary Pickford offering and drew big business.

The proprietors of the Grand will get all the releases of the Paramount Picture corporation, which included the appearance in films of such notables as Bertha Kalish, Charles Richman, Henrietta Crosman, Margaret Clark, Maclyn Arbuckle, Edward Abeles, Hobert Bosworth, John Barrymore and others.

Springfield has just seen its first home-made motion pictures, and every one who saw them likes them. Fred W. Vermillion, who a short time ago installed a motion picture camera, snapped the parade of the Illinois Grand Commandery, Knights Templar; the Shriners' parade on the day of the ceremonial session of Ansar Temple of Springfield, the baby temple of Shrinedom in America; and the Labor Day parade in which thousands of union labor men of Springfield and Decatur marched.

Big Export Field Open in Latin America

European War Has Cut Off the Supply Which Central and South America Depended Upon, to Such an Extent That Producers in the United States Now Have an Unparalleled Opportunity to Capture a Motion Picture Field of Unlimited Possibilities

A GOLDEN harvest awaits producers of motion pictures in Central and South America. The manufacturers in the United States should awake to a realization of this at once.

The people in the Latin-American countries below us are in the right mood to buy every kind of film that we bring out. Film drama has become a stable part of the entertainment of the South and Central Americans. In all the seaport towns it has affected regular drama, vaudeville, and even the standby of the music-loving Latins, opera.

And when it comes to interior towns they have taken to photo plays with all the earnestness and delight of the small-town inhabitant in the United States.

Since the beginning of the industry manufacturers of Latin affiliation, the French, Spanish and Italians, have been supplying South America with films.

BECAUSE they took the trouble to study the requirements of the public they intended to sell, they got the business that Americans should have had but which they failed to get through crass negligence and indifference.

The Americans in this field have acted the same as other manufacturers in this country have acted toward export trade below the equator on this hemisphere.

But now conditions have changed to such an extent that American manufacturers of all kinds, particularly those in the film business, cannot afford to ignore them any longer.

This change has been brought about by the European situation.

ON account of the war the supply of new films has been cut off. There is no output of photo drama in France, Spain or Italy, the chief sources of films in Central and South America. And of course the demand has not abated in consequence. On the other hand, it is increasing in leaps and bounds.

So there is the situation which offers the manufacturers in this country unrivalled opportunities for capturing an already large and rapidly increasing film market.

Do we want it? Why not?

Here is a chance for the American producers to jump in and cinch the lion's share of a big field. By studying the situation with the same close attention that is ungrudgingly given our local markets the American producers should be able to hold it against all comers later on when foreign manufacturers again begin producing.

THE people in the Latin-American countries are now looking forward to the United States for their supply of films. This certainly should make it easier for our producers to get a half-nelson on the export business.

For some reason or other, the importance of going after the Latin-American business without delay has not impressed itself on our manufacturers. Some, to be sure, have seen the opportunity and are losing no time, but the majority have not shown evidences of appreciating the unlimited business just waiting them for the asking.

Indeed, this procrastination has astonished the people below the Rio Grande. They naturally supposed that Americans with their keen foresight and business acumen would instantly recognize the bumper orders ready for the first enterprising manufacturer who sent a capable man on a film scouting expedition.

Numerous letters have come north from puzzled exhibitors and exchange men, asking for explanations of this American indifference.

One correspondent, Manuel Cespedes, in Costa Rica, voices the general South American sentiment, in a letter which, in addition to this complaint, contains many interesting observations on general film conditions in his country.

THE letter follows:

Why is it that producers in the United States do not endeavor to supply the motion picture market in Central America? We would be glad to see a branch office of any of the regular program firms established in this city, San Jose, or any of the other cities of this republic. An exchange would have a hundred theatres ready to take a regular service continually.

We get the Pathé pictures here and the exhibitors like the subjects made by this company, but we want an opportunity to make a wider selection, possible only with releases presented to us for consideration by more than one firm.

If Americans pin their faith on the slogan "America for Americans," why stop at the canal? They should begin to think of pushing their goods in all the countries south of the zone. Now that the export trade of Europe is dead the Americans have a chance, unlimited in scope.

THIS not only applies to the export trade of the United States in general, but in respect to the film business in particular. Is it laziness or what that prevents your manufacturers from making this expansion?

In sending representatives they should, however, take a tip from the Germans, who always made it a point to study our needs. They never made the mistake of sending an agent who could not speak Spanish fluently. Films always had the titles in Spanish. What few American pictures we received have in the majority of cases had the titles in English.

The producers should stop and put themselves in the place of our people. How can the spectators follow the story of a play with titles in an alien language? How would an audience in the United States receive an Italian or French picture with all the titles printed in a foreign tongue?

And, by the way, do you know that we Costa Ricans are ahead of you Americans in some respects?

We have seen many films long before they were shown in the theatres of the United States. For instance, we exhibited "Germania" on January 15, this year, "Les Miserables" on July 28 of last year. When "The Last Days of Pompeii" was advertised as coming we were showing the picture here.

WE play to excellent business, though there are only three millions of people to draw from against your ninety-five millions. Our prices are much better. The American exhibitor charges about twenty-five cents, but we get about a dollar in gold.

Now, as to getting American-made pictures. I got in touch with one of the big releasing companies some time ago and it wanted a guarantee of two thousand dollars and two dollars a week for twenty reels, which I consider exorbitant. I wrote another big producing concern, and the management referred me to the Paris branch. On taking up the matter with the branch in France I was informed that spot cash was necessary with each order.

Of course I realize that these companies naturally did not feel like making shipments so far away on credit.

$500,000 Theatre Opens in Buffalo

Shea's Hippodrome Calls Forth Encomiums for Rich Decorations and Conveniences for Patrons—Has $25,000 Orchestral Organ—Various Features of Its Decorations and Furnishings Combine to Make It One of America's Beautiful Photoplay Theatres

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Buffalo, Sept. 16.

SHEA'S Hippodrome, which opened its doors to the public Monday, August 31, and Buffalo theatergoers will surely have reason for self-congratulation in the magnificent half-million-dollar Photo Playhouse, Manager Shea has added to the city's places of amusement.

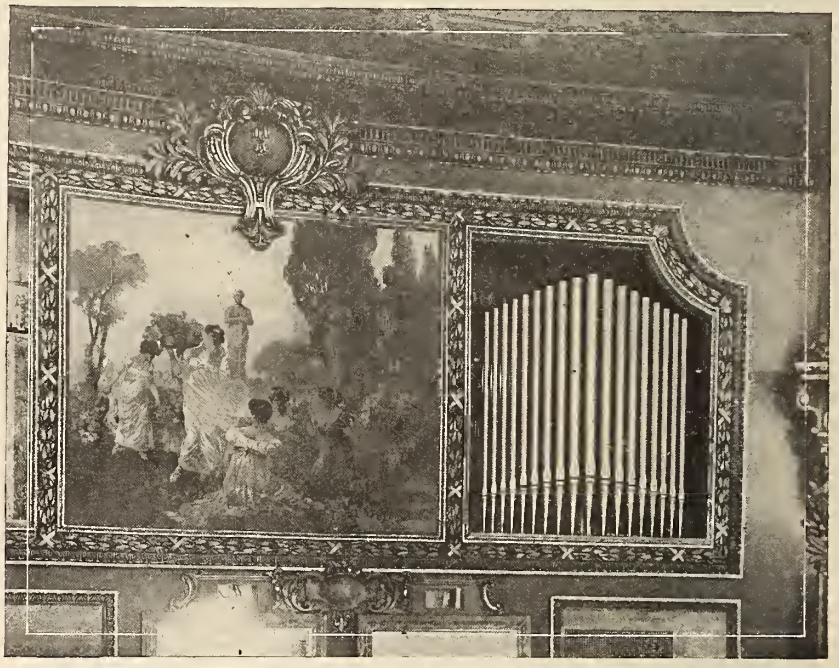
The property on Main street, near Chippewa street has remained idle for many years, and there has always been a question as to the form of improvement that would eventually be made on the site.

Mr. Shea purchased the property from B. F. Keith, who had abandoned it as a theatre site some years before. As soon as Mr. Shea came into possession immediate plans were made for the erection of a theatre, although the policy of this house was not decided upon until the present season.

Shea's Hippodrome is one of the most beautiful playhouses in America. The entrance is on Main street through a lobby one hundred and ten feet long, beautifully decorated in old ivory and gold with seven hundred electric lights hidden in the beamed ceiling and each beam supported at the sides by a magnificent and massive figure.

The floor is of mosaic tile and a wainscot of English veined marble six feet high makes even this gorgeous approach to the theatre itself but a faint promise of the beauty that lies beyond.

Leaving the lobby one finds himself in the foyer and again the eye sweeps a distance of one hundred and thirty feet to the exit beyond on Pearl street. Rich carpets of velvet in deep red cover the Kompolite floors, blending into the old ivory decoration of the walls with their beautiful panels of old rose silk tapestry.



This foyer leads across the entire width of the Auditorium as the right wall of the theater itself stretches along Pearl street. The auditorium itself unfolds wonder after wonder of beauty everywhere, and soft tones and the indirect lighting of the dome and side decorations tend to soften and bring the immense space into cozy and refined proportions.

Instead of the high ceiling under the balcony on the orchestra floor, so familiar to Buffalo theatregoers, the ceiling has been lowered in Shea's Hippodrome and the space between the ceiling and the balcony floor has been converted into a commodious mezzanine reached by two marble stairways, each nine feet wide, located at either side of the auditorium.

There is only a comparatively slight rise to this mezzanine, and from it the patrons enter the balcony on a level, thus eliminating the long climb to the balcony itself, which has been in the past a hardship for many theatre patrons.

The main ceiling of the auditorium and the ceiling of the orchestra under the mezzanine, are beautifully panelled and beamed with ornamental plaster work, and the private boxes and proscenium arch are as elaborate and artistic as modern ideas can make them.

The massive dome in the main ceiling is illuminated by indirect lighting and adds greatly to the pleasing effect of the auditorium and is beautifully decorated with a painting in soft tints called "The Dance of the Hours." The hours symbolize life from its Springtime to its dying embers of midnight.

In the orchestra pit is placed a $25,000 orchestral organ as well as a well-balanced orchestra; the organ also fills the space over the private boxes on either side of the house; the bronze gold of the majestic organ pipes adding to the dignity of the detail of the entire auditorium.

New Grand Rapids Theatre Begins Career

House Well Decorated and Equipped with Latest Devices, Including a Sprinkling System—Uses Two Projection Machines

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Grand Rapids, Mich., Sept. 16.

A NEW motion picture theatre, the Princess, has opened on the site of the old Garrick on Monroe avenue, N. W. The theatre is under the management of A. S. Davis and Son, managers of the Lyric Theatre, and it is one of the cosiest picture houses in the city and has a seating capacity of 300.

The decorations are in ivory and gold, the indirect lighting, set in attractive gold fixtures, is restful to the eyes.

A fan ventilating system changes the air every two minutes and during the summer the temperature can be kept at seventy degrees, regardless of the weather while in the winter the warm air is kept fresh.

The operating room in which two machines are installed is of steel and concrete fireproof construction; it is also fitted with a sprinkler system just as an additional precautionary measure. The exits are fitted with panic doors and every safety measure has been taken.

"BUSINESS AS USUAL," BRITISH TRADE SLOGAN

Loss of Continental Films Made Up by British and American Supply, Says Manager Kimberly of Thanhouser, Ltd.—American Film Makers' Chance at Hand—War Picture Craze Only Temporary, He Thinks—"Exhibitor Is King in England"

"REALLY, we in the cinema business in London are not nearly as hard hit by the war as you might think. The supply of German, French and Italian films is shut off, it is true, but as American and British productions control 70 per cent. of the market, anyway, and the supply of these films is as plenteous as ever, that result of the war has not disconcerted us at all.

"The time-honored phrase of the British merchant 'Business is as usual,' has become a by-word in the motion picture business in London. The trade papers have taken it up, the film dealers and exhibitors are building on it. And it is actually true. Business is as usual."

This was the reassuring outline of the state of the British motion picture world given by Paul Kimberly, manager of Thanhouser Films, Limited, of London, to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS a few days ago.

Mr. Kimberly came over on a flying visit to the States, undaunted by the discomforts of traveling on a refugee ship in war time, and returns within a week or so, to resume his congenial duty of increasing the circulation of Thanhouser films in the United Kingdom.

War Film Craze Only Temporary

"IN some of the garrison and seaport towns," Mr. Kimberly continued, "the motion picture theatres have been turned into hospitals by the authorities, along with other buildings of a commercial or public nature. But elsewhere, and nearly everywhere, the cinema theatres are entertaining the British public in as great crowds as ever."

"War pictures are, of course, in great demand?" he was asked.

"Naturally they are," he assented, "at this time," he added with marked emphasis. "But, for my part, I firmly believe the popularity of the war film is very short-lived. When the excitement of martial preparations and the departure of troops for the front has died away, and the staggering casualty lists begin to get into the papers, there will be a tremendous reaction against war pictures.

"Men and women will then want to go to the theatre to forget their sorrows, not to be reminded of them.

"The motion picture theatre will then be the safety-valve of the public; it is now to a great degree, but its service in that capacity will be still greater when the time I have just predicted arrives.

"Then and there the American manufacturer will have his opportunity. American films are popular in London and the provinces now. They will be ten times as popular then, and if the American film companies will continue to supply us regularly and in sufficient quantity with pictures, the loss of the Continental importations will never be felt.

PAUL KIMBERLY

Opportunity for Americans

"I don't mean to say that the American firms are not backing up the London houses at the present time. They are. But more films will be required a few months—even weeks—hence, than now from America, because every London house will by that time have exhausted its reserve supply of foreign pictures, and the American companies will have everything their own way."

"What of the film chemical situation in England, Mr. Kimberly?" was the next question.

"Chemicals are undoubtedly scarce," was the reply. "But I have reason to think that the British manufacturers—there are several large and powerful firms competent to undertake it—are planning to manufacture all the market requires. You won't hear anything of it, or read of it in the papers, but the movement is going on just the same. The British manufacturer, you know, is thinking hardest when he's saying least.

"Thanhouser, Ltd., I may say, is in excellent shape," continued Mr. Kimberly. "We have releases now right up to the end of November and 500,000 feet of raw film in stock. I don't think we have very great cause for alarm at the present moment.

Exhibitor Is King in England

"There is one radical difference between the American and the English exhibitor, I have noticed," continued the visitor, passing from the subject of the war to more general topics of the trade.

"And that is, that in England, the exhibitor is king to a far greater degree than in your country.

"By that I mean, competition in England is far keener than it is here. The market is absolutely open, and, if I am not mistaken, the proportion of buyers to sellers is less than in the United States.

"I should say, to put the case another way, that there were 250,000 feet of film a week on the London market. As you know, scarcely a theatre changes its program oftener than twice a week in England. And almost none of them uses more than 5,000 feet to a program.

"Obviously, he can afford to insist upon merit before everything else, and it is merit and merit alone that rules the market in the United Kingdom.

"And don't you imagine for a moment that the exhibitor in England doesn't know what he is getting before he buys a film. No cats in a bag for him.

Engage Professional Reviewers

"Many of them engage professional film reviewers to make the rounds of the trade, see the pictures of the week and report to them on the actual merits and demerits of every picture. Others make it their business to see for themselves every picture they consider purchasing.

"That is, of course, much easier to do in England than here, where distances are much greater, and where you have a daily change of program.

"But, do you know, it's as much as your reputation is worth to put on a poor picture before a group of exhibitors in London? They'll sit through the first one, and perhaps the second.

"But before the exchange manager gets a chance to try a third on them, there'll be a cry of 'Have you any more like those last two? Because if you have, you and your operator can stay and see them, we won't!' And out they go.

"There is certainly no doubt that the exhibitor rules, with us."

TRIBUTE TO CHARLES J. HITE

At a meeting of the board of directors of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, held on September 10, the following statement was directed to be spread upon the minutes:

The directors of New York Motion Picture Corporation have heard, with deep sorrow, of the death of their associate Charles J. Hite, a man of strong purpose and broad outlook, with whom the appreciation of a problem meant its solution, eager for new operations and quick to seize them when they came, always a true and loyal friend, and fair and just in every relationship. The loss of his counsel will be long and deeply felt, and his memory will go with us through life as that of an upright, able, vigorous and kindly man.

Two Buffalo Managers Hand in Resignations

Kaliska Will Be Succeeded by E. S. McFadden at the Allendale—Willats Picked to Manage the Regent

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Buffalo, Sept. 16.

THERE have been a few important changes in Buffalo motion picture circles during the past week. Albert R. Sherry, who was appointed manager of the Shea Hippodrome upon its opening, handed in his resignation recently and by so doing created no end of surprise among local exhibitors.

Dissatisfaction with existing conditions in the managerial end of the theatre is given as the reason for the resignation inasmuch as "too many cooks sometimes get monotonous" and make the chef look elsewhere for a position.

However, Mr. Sherry will be at the Hippodrome for a few weeks, and there is a bare possibility that matters may be smoothed over.

Another manager who has resigned is William G. Kaliska, of the Allendale Theatre, who left that theatre on Saturday, September 12. His place will be taken by E. S. McFadden, who comes to Buffalo from New York, where he was connected with various theatrical interests.

Mr. McFadden was press agent for the Lafayette Theatre in Buffalo two years ago. He comes to the Allendale with a thorough knowledge of theatrical management in every sense of the word.

Mr. Kaliska has gone to Keith's Theatre for a short time, while Manager Charles Bowe, of that theatre will help Mr. McFadden along at the Allendale. Mr. Kaliska has had several offers locally and is at present considering which proposition to accept.

Arthur Willats, for many years connected with amusement enterprises in this city, has been appointed manager of the Regent Theatre, the new Mark-Brock photoplay house at the corner of Main and Utica streets, which opens to the public about the 28th of September. Mr. Willats is well liked among the local exhibitors, he having represented several manufacturers as local representative for their features. Mr. Willats did some big business recently with "Richard III" in Buffalo and western New York.

He will have a most beautiful house to lead to fortune, as the Regent is a "theatre de luxe" in every way. Henry W. Marcus, formerly director of Shea's Theatre orchestra and very prominent as a local musician, will direct the orchestra. A large organ will be one of the features. Mr. Willats is a very busy man at present arranging for the opening of the theatre.

Pittsburgh Exchanges Ordered to Vacate Offices

Jones and Grelle Compelled to Leave Building Which Had Passed Fire Inspection of Two Administrations

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Pittsburgh, Sept. 16.

THE police department is again becoming more active with regard to taking a hand in the motion picture business of this city. They have done many things in the past in a manner that was most displeasing to the managers of theatres, and to the public at large. In many cases it has led step by step up to a battle between the city solicitor and an attorney from the motion picture men.

This time it has been a case of the police department stepping in and serving notice on two of the film exchanges whereby they must move from the building which they now occupy and seek quarters elsewhere. Notice was served by the officials upon George A. Jones, Jr., and H. L. Grelle, both doing business in the Cameraphone building in Fifth avenue.

The police stated that in order to make it less liable to a repetition of the disaster of the Ferguson building fire of several years ago they must move to other quarters.

The Cameraphone building has few tenants and all of them with one exception are interested in the motion picture business and had no objections to the two tenants.

Jones is manager of the Richard's Features, while Grelle is the owner of the Grelle Feature Film Company. Jones got busy and found a room at 121 Fourth avenue, but Grelle was not so fortunate and was granted an extension of time by the officials. The reason could not be learned.

It is said there is a film manufacturing plant on the top floor of the building, but this, it is said will not be molested.

It is said there is a move on foot whereby a company is to erect a modern fireproof building with safety vaults where motion picture men can find quarters and where their films can be stored with safety.

The two companies ordered removed from the Cameraphone building have been located there several years and were investigated under two administrations in the city and not molested. Politics seems to be back of the move in this case, but an explanation from officials or complaint from the trade in general has yet been forthcoming.

How An Exchange Man Won His Exhibitors

By Albert Cliff Sproul

He Blazed a New Path and by Rendering Real Assistance, Put Money in the Pockets of His Clients—He Studied the Needs of Every Individual, Built Up Programs to Suit Each Situation and Stamped Out Cut-Throat Competition.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—This is the first of a series of articles treating live matters vitally interesting members of the motion picture industry. Each paper is full of meaty information, and every reader will derive benefit from the illuminative and suggestive comment the author makes on problems confronting exhibitors and exchange men.

JENSEN believed in facts obtained by exhaustive research. His Swedish forbears impelled him to examine every undertaking with microscopic thoroughness. And it was that inherited tendency that caused him to adopt the same methods when he took hold of the exchange.

His territory was infested with an overwhelming number of motion-picture banditti, engaged in as wasting cut-throat competition as one would wish to see. The exhibitors had their knives unsheathed most of the time, and were ever ready to deal the finishing blow on a weaker member.

As Jensen soon found out, they were at odds with one another on every point save one—and that was the exchange. There they were united.

There is very little love lost, as a rule, between the exhibitor and the manager of an exchange. The former is bitter at the fancied idea of having to pay tribute; the latter indifferent so long as his returns average well.

IN Jensen's case, the antagonism was intense. His predecessor had acted like a bull in a crockery store, in dealing with his clients, and it behooved Jensen to placate them.

The personal line of approach was out of the question. It was a case that called for subtle strategy. And Jensen was equal to the occasion. The only way, he decided, was to build up, in his section, the retail business of the motion picture industry. As soon as the exhibitors began to make money and realized that their success was due to him, just so soon would they become customers of his.

So he formulated his plans, all laid out with a scientific tape measure. He listed every prospective customer on a card, printed in the following manner:

Name of Theatre .....
Address .....
Seating Capacity .....
Locality .....
Manager .....
Ability .....
Remarks .....

IT was essential, to be sure, to learn the size of the theatre and the locality from which it drew its patronage. More important than that, however, was to size up the manager properly and determine whether or not he was a live wire.

Jensen decided to eliminate from his campaign all those who were impossible, realizing fully that he would merely be wasting his time on such transients in the business.

To make his list worth while, he obviously was obliged to glean his information at first-hand. Hearsay reports and glittering generalities were worthless as far as he was concerned. It was necessary for him to visit each theatre in person to discover the flaws.

This, of course, took time and money, but no undertaking is worth the candle which does not require considerable preliminary work. Jensen was willing to play the game patiently.

HE started out, therefore, on his itinerary, armed to the teeth with notebooks in which to transcribe his discoveries. He visited each theatre incognito, and took elaborate notes on what he saw. He jotted down carefully each defect that met his eye. The illumination, arrangement and ornamentation of the theatre, the music, the projection, and, above all, the policy and personality of the manager.

To find out the latter required many legitimate subterfuges and tentative probings, but Jensen was both resourceful and tactful. He managed to gain the requisite information before he left the theatre.

Some of the managers, off-shoots of the old regime when a barber or a butcher felt competent to enter the new field to direct the destinies of a theatre, he curtly labeled impossible and paid no further attention to them.

This was the case especially of a pig-headed, dogmatic graduate of a delicatessen store. The owner and manager had engaged his entire progeny—so it seemed to Jensen—in running the theatre. Unfortunately for the staff, however, a motion picture theatre cannot be run like a delicatessen shop. Jensen saw the handwriting on the wall for the proprietor.

THOSE with whom he particularly concerned himself were men whose clean-cut appearance and deep, though misdirected, enthusiasm labeled them as permanent, provided they could get the proper perspective. In other words, they belonged where they were. In these Jensen saw the nucleus of a paying business; with them he was building on solid rock.

At that time, however, they were trying to make a profit with the expenses larger than the receipts. Rivalry had forced down the admission fees and swelled the program beyond all proportions. Souvenirs, cups for song competitions, etc., too elaborate, as a rule, served only to make matters worse. Jensen noted each fact carefully.

It took Jensen two months of intermittent work before he had adequately covered the field, and it was two weeks more before he had his card index entirely filled out and was ready for the next step. How could he direct the misguided energy of all the possible managers into the proper channels? That was the problem that faced him.

The answer was to encourage them to spend their money in such a way that it would bring a proportionate profit on the investment. Again he had to resort to a subterfuge, for it would spoil all to try, as yet, to deal with them in person. The rancor still existed.

GOING over the list carefully, he noted the requirements of each manager. Many of them had needs in common. In a number of the houses, the projection was poor; in others, the illumination was inadequate, and so it went.

Having listed their mutual needs, he next turned to those concerns who could best supply them and entered into a "conspiracy" with the firms. Here is the way it worked out. Let us suppose that Weller, manager of The Unique, needed a new screen. He would receive from the company which Jensen had deemed best fitted to furnish it, a letter which would run as follows:

Mr. A. T. Weller,
Manager of The Unique.

Dear Sir: The managers of the Pastime and the Beacon, both of your town, have received our offer of a special discount on our (here would follow a to-the-point description of the screen with its many advantages and money-making value).

We feel that you will be interested to learn about this, and have, therefore, taken the liberty of communicating with you.

New Minneapolis Theatre Marks Epoch

The Saxe, a $150,000 House, Built Exclusively for Films, Takes Rank with the Best in the Northwest

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Minneapolis, Sept. 15.

THE recent opening of the Saxe theatre, Seventh street, between Nicollet and Hennepin avenues, marked an epoch in the history of amusement in this city.

It is the first theatre of the first class in the Northwest to be constructed as a film theater exclusively.

A ventilating system has been provided that completely changes the atmosphere every 10 minutes. The self-diffusing system of illumination is used. A novelty consists of a mezzanine lounge for women.

The sum of $100,000 has been spent upon the construction of the building and $50,000 for equipment and furnishings. The width is 50 feet, the depth 157 feet and the height 50 feet.

The style of architecture is modern Spanish Renaissance, with elaborate terra cotta ornamentation of designs that are emblematic of art and music which grace the cornice, the top of the portal and surmount French windows on its either side. The color is a grayish white, which lends itself well to the style of decoration, the general effect being that of lightness and daintiness.

Two thousand electric lights which pulsate by flasher control greatly enhance the artistic beauty of the front without a too glaring effect.

Within the portal which shelters the lobby entrance this style of decoration is continued in the pilasters, rosettes and recessed panels. A frieze of nine sculptured medallions use the figure of a woman in representing the seasons of the year.

The lobby is wainscoted with foreign marble, above which are poster frames or bronze covered with plate glass. The ticket booth is also of marble, approachable from three sides and an automatic ticket seller will be used which is new here, which greatly expedites the handling of crowds.

The frames of the doors opening into the lobby are of mahogany finish, as are window casements and stairway railings, this being the only wood used in the construction, which is of concrete and steel throughout from basement to roof. Doorways from the lobby to auditorium are covered with Russian leather. The panels of the arched segmental ceiling are finished in gold.

Wall tints are of rose, ornamentation of old ivory. The flooring for the foyer is of red promenade tile with Marovian inserts. The wainscoting is of foreign marble of light tone and large marble newels are used as pedestals for flower vases at the foot of circular marble stairways which lead to the mezzanine.

The mezzanine lounge for women, 48 x 30 feet, is located between foyer and balcony, with delicately rose-tinted walls, old ivory ornamentation, mahogany wainscoting, segmental ceiling and casement windows.

Electric fixtures are specially artistic, there being two large bronze candellabras, large urns for indirect lighting in the ceiling with opaque glass frames and old ivory ornamentation. An elliptical light well in the center of the room gives a glimpse of the lobby below. Artistic furnishings include writing tables and desk telephone service.

Leather upholstered opera chairs are arranged in five sections in the balcony, which will seat 500 people.

The walls and ceiling of the auditorium are tinted a very light rose color with recessed panels of large size in mottled old rose, terra cotta ornamentation for panels and openings for exhaust fans in the form of large rosettes as well as for the decoration of the proscenium arch are very elaborate and are hand-made, touched with gold.

The casual observer will perhaps be deceived to thinking that the balcony extends along the sides of the auditorium to the rear. The appearance of loggias is given, but the space is used for direct aisles to rear exits, and there are no seats to obstruct a clear passage.

GERTRUDE McCOY INJURED

While rehearsing a scene directed by John H. Collins, Gertrude McCoy, the leading lady of the Edison Company, received a very painful injury to her left hand.

In making her exit from a room, Miss McCoy had reached for the half-opened door, when suddenly it slammed, crushing two of her fingers between the edge of the door and the woodwork. Although suffering intense pain, Miss McCoy never lost consciousness, but displayed that indomitable nerve which has gained for her a host of admirers among the fans.

Upon examination by the studio doctor it was found that the two fingers were badly crushed and the nail on one completely torn off. The deepest sympathy is felt for Miss McCoy by all the members of the Edison Company and many hopes are entertained for her speedy recovery.

HOMMEL ISSUES GUIDE FOR EXHIBITORS

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Pittsburgh, Sept. 15.

Ludwig Hommel and Company, 422 Fourth avenue, has issued a leather-bound book containing data of use to exhibitors.

The principles of optical projection are fully explained with diagrams. In the back of the book are many pages left blank for memoranda and a pocket for loose notes.

Universal Doubles Force Working on Its "City"

The Community, Which Includes Even Water, Fire, Street Cleaning and Police Departments, Will When Finished Accommodate 10,000

THE Universal Film Manufacturing Company is pushing forward the building and equipping of its new Universal City.

From the time of its inception, there has been no halt in the work, no time, money or labor spared to make the city one of the most stupendous things of its kind ever attempted.

The force of men employed has been almost doubled, more animals have been ordered from New York to augment the collection that goes to make one of the largest privately owned menageries in the State of California. A rock crusher was bought and installed for the crushing of the rock necessary in the macadamizing of the six miles of paved streets between the rows of buildings, plans for a concrete dam and bridge over Universal river were drafted and the work started, a number of draft horses and mules were secured together with flat top wagons, harness and similar equipment.

The city is being built with the primary intention of adding to the comfort of the actors and employes as well as to facilitate the production of the typical Universal films. Large roomy dressing rooms are being built, a club house erected, which will contain a huge living and lounging room, a dining hall, ball room, kitchen and a number of bed rooms for housing of the employes who do not care to rent the small cottages that have also been built for their company.

A restaurant is being constructed in which the patron may obtain at a more reasonable cost everything that he might order at the down town cafes, and in every way Universal City is being planned and built to accommodate a population of 10,000. It is modern in every respect, has its own sewer system, water mains, street department, fire department, police force and is to be equipped with stores, shops, schools and everything necessary to enable the people of the city to live in it without ever having to go to any of the neighboring cities and towns to procure anything they may want.

MAKING THE FILM "GAME" A BUSINESS

It Seemed at First a "Game" to Kolb, and He Entered It Reluctantly, but When He Had Investigated, He Found It a Business, and His Success Is the Result of Scientific Business Principles Applied in Five Flourishing Theatres

"ONE never knows what a small venture is going to lead to," observed Dr. George C. Kolb, physician, capitalist and motion picture magnate of Cincinnati.

"Two years ago I had scarcely been inside a motion picture house and had seen very few films. I was not interested in either pictures or theatres. Consequently I repeatedly turned a deaf ear to enthusiastic friends who wished me to invest with them in a motion picture theatre.

"Finally, at a bank directors' meeting, my friends insisted that I get into the movie game with them. They practically forced me to take a block of stock in the company which they were forming. I did this reluctantly because I had no sympathy with motion pictures.

"Today I own the controlling interest in five of the large motion picture companies of Cincinnati. More than this I am devoting most of my time to motion pictures and motion picture theatres and have found great enjoyment, as well as ample return in a financial way as the result of my investment."

DR. KOLB'S experience as a motion picture exhibitor is peculiarly interesting.

He is a man of scientific mind, possessing also the rare quality of sound business judgment. Even though he thought little of his first venture into the picture game, his business judgment insisted on an investigation of the business against which he had staked his dollars.

After he began his investigations, he found that he had entered a business which offered untold opportunities for study of human nature on scientific business lines. From his first night at the little theatre, which had been erected in Fairmount, a suburb of Cincinnati, he found himself sunk deep in study on widely divergent lines, all, however, centering at one point—the success of his picture theatre.

With the consent of his fellow stockholders, he assumed full charge of the theatre's management and set about to build up its patronage.

First he studied the people in the neighborhood.

He learned their likes and dislikes.

He stood in the lobby of his little theatre before and after each performance.

He spoke to his patrons before they entered the house and as they were leaving.

He felt out their views on film subjects, and in three days' time knew exactly what class of films the people wanted to see.

NEXT, with a keen business eye, he took up the study of his employes. He laid down rules for their deportment. He demanded a certain courtesy, a certain standard of appearance and a large amount of efficiency from each.

Then the study course reached out to embrace the lobby display, music, projection, and the like.

When his theatre was playing to its capacity every night, he placed the manager he had selected in full charge and set about to build another theatre. He found little difficulty in forming the stock companies necessary to build his new theatres. His success with the first one had paved the way for future successes.

"Each theatre is owned by a different company," said Dr. Kolb, "in which I have the controlling interest. I do this for protection against disaster. If one of the theatres should get into trouble, the others, being owned by different companies, would not be involved."

OUT in Norwood, in a highly aristocratic neighborhood, he built "The Norwood," a theatre with a seating capacity of 1,200. It has been devoted almost exclusively to high-class features at ten cents, and has been wonderfully successful.

The construction of other theatres followed in rapid succession.

"The Woodward," located at Main and Webster streets, Cincinnati, has a seating capacity of 700; "The Empire," 1521-23 Vine street, seats 462, and an airdome in Fairview Heights seats 800 persons.

Dr. Kolb is now making his plans for the construction, in a short time, of three new theatres, one of them to be located in the West End of Cincinnati, which motion picture men have found most fertile of patronage.

"No two of my theatres are alike," mused Dr. Kolb. "The reason is plain to one who has studied the people in the different sections of Cincinnati. I do not know whether the population in other cities is so arranged as it is here, but I believe this must be so in every large city.

"I have found that people of similar sentiments, similar ideals and similar standards of living congregate in the same neighborhood. I have made it my duty to analyze these neighborhoods and their population so that I know definitely before I establish my theatre just what sort of people I am to have for patrons. In Cincinnati I have found that there is the difference between the sun and the moon in people living on Main street and those living on Vine street, two squares away.

"The Woodward, my house on Main street, must have amateur vaudeville on its program. The people demand it just as they demand that the theatre furnish singing between films, although this phase of entertainment has been discarded by almost every exhibitor in the city.

"If I should have vaudeville and singing on my program at the Empire, on Vine street, almost a stone's throw away, I would play to an empty house. The Empire patrons by the same token will not tolerate the films which are demanded by the Main street audiences.

"OUT at the Norwood, I give the patrons the Famous Players' films and features of similar character. For this I charge ten cents, while my other houses must show three reels at least for a nickel.

"I tried an experiment with my Norwood patrons once and nearly lost them all. I put on a program equal in every respect to the 10-cent shows I had been giving to large audiences. My patrons came up to the lobby, saw that the admission price was 5 cents, and turned away.

"The show was too cheap for them.

"Whenever I start a new theatre I make it a rule to take personal charge of it for a period of time sufficient to make myself thoroughly familiar with the theatre and the patrons.

"WHEN I have solved every problem in detail, I turn it over to the manager. In that way I can keep in close touch with all of my theatres, and if anything goes wrong, can jump in and be in a position to turn the tide again without losing time in familiarizing myself with the affairs of the house.

"I think the fact that my theatres have all made good showings on the profit side of the ledger during the past summer, when all exhibitors in Cincinnati were complaining about the dullness of business, proves that my system is a good one and worth trying by the small exhibitor, as well as the man who is in charge of a string of theatres."

FILM DRAMA HAS STRONG HOLD ON KENTUCKY

Demand for High Class Plays Increasing Rapidly—Exhibitors Realize Value of Liberal Advertising in Educating the Public—Crescent Hill Residents Feared Effect of Pictures, But Learned That They Taught Strong Lesson for Good

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Louisville, Ky., Sept. 16.

PROBABLY no other State in this country is witnessing such rapid development of appreciation and good will for motion pictures as Kentucky, where there now is considerable activity in establishing new houses as well as a plainly evident tendency among exhibitors toward producing the better class shows.

As the people become better acquainted with the pictures, exhibitors here say, the demand for the better class of drama and clean comedy plays grows in pace.

Louisville has a number of houses catering to patrons who find enjoyment in stirring, and often lurid, melodramas; but few houses or plays of this character, however, are found throughout the State.

Exhibitors in some sections of Kentucky are using newspaper space freely in educating the public to know and appreciate their "goods." For instance, in Harrodsburg, a well-known citizen of that town has a signed article in a local newspaper which, while though run as pure reading matter and gladly accepted by the editor of the paper, will be worth many columns of paid-for space. In part, the article reads:

"THE motion picture show has come to stay. It's up to the public to determine what kind of motion picture shows we shall have. The people who are engaged in making and producing motion picture plays are not in the business for philanthropy; they are going to meet the public demand for the thing the public wants.

"If the public wants gush, the canvas will be spoony; if the people who patronize them demand that every night the heroine shall be made to do the dime-novel stuff, that the hero shall walk into a saloon and clean out the joint (after showing all his hero-worshippers that the gentlemanly thing to do is to visit a saloon in order to flourish a gun), that promiscuous embracing be put in to appear to the 'perfectly natural' folks (and, incidentally, to young people whose ideas of propriety are very unstable); so long as this is the type of pictures demanded we will have nothing better.

"We may stand off and berate the shows and bemoan our lot in these modern times, but the motion picture is getting in its work. For one, I appreciate the steps being taken in an effort to get a better class of plays before our community. Just as readers pass out of the Nick Carter stage, so it seems there has come a feeling that we could have some more solid stuff, even as entertainment.

"The motion picture men here see this tendency, and are glad to see it. They are men who would find pleasure in putting before the public plays that are artistic, that have the right ethical tone, and which will cultivate rather than pervert the dramatic taste of the community.

"THE picture show can be made a mighty power for human uplift if we support the right thing. We can have here in pictures the dramatization of the virile new books, and the classics of old; we can see Shakespeare played; we can have the distant places of earth brought near and see great actors in great themes, a thing possible in no other way."

Recently the ultra-exclusive Crescent Hill section of the city of Louisville raised such a loud voice of protest that the City Building Inspector refused to grant a permit to Harry R. Whiteside and others for the erection of a motion picture theatre building in that neighborhood.

The residents of this neighborhood based their objections upon a fear of the effect upon the youth of Crescent Hill of possible melodramatic plays and, although an appeal to the courts was contemplated by Mr. Whiteside and his associates, the project has been abandoned.

As a result of this protest against the introduction of a motion picture house in Crescent Hill, the first occasion of the kind to occur in this city, a great deal of publicity was given the matter through the local newspapers and considerable discussion of the effects upon the youth of the city of motion pictures in general resulted.

IT is evident that there are few who so strenuously oppose the films as do the Crescent Hill residents

Many of the exclusive motion picture theatres here have an exceptionally high class patronage and the pictures are featured at a number of combination houses.

Some of the opponents of the proposed theatre in Crescent Hill went so far even as to claim that the picture theatres and supposed "white slavers" were so closely allied as to be a menace, and horror was added to the situation by the introduction of talk of poisoned needle possibilities.

A new angle was given recently by John H. Boswell, press agent for Keith's Theatre, to the argument that the picture shows lead into iniquitous paths.

"NOT so very long ago," said Mr. Boswell, "a very unusual series of events in the life of two very well-known young people in this city came under my notice. A pretty young matron, whose husband, a traveling salesman, was away from home much of the time, became a regular visitor to our afternoon show.

"While they never came together, I soon began to notice that a young man, a friend of both the husband and wife, arrived at about the same time, and that they always found seats together.

"After a while they began buying up a block of seats in some corner of the floor and would stay through the picture program practically unobserved by anyone else in the house.

"I had been a lone and unknown observer of the escapade for two of three months when a film was put on which so closely paralleled the trend of events in the lives of these two that I took special pains to observe their every action during its projection.

"THE play, in brief, told the story of a young wife left much alone. Another man innocently enough undertook to occasionally entertain the pretty wife of his friend during his absence.

"The plot was carried through to the inevitable discovery of a friendship that had ripened into love, and the wife was cast off by her husband.

"A dramatic climax was quickly reached, at the conclusion of which the young woman was sitting forward staring horror-struck as the picture message carried realization of the tragic end she was unconsciously shaping in her own life.

"The man at her side laid his hand gently on her shoulder in an evident attempt to quiet her agitation, but without avail. She sank limply back in her seat sobbing convulsively, but when the lights came on she partly regained control over her emotions and the two left as quickly as possible.

"They never returned; that is, together; and I know that one picture play prevented a tragedy in real life and saved from wreckage the happiness of two, possibly three, persons."

ANNA LITTLE OUT OF CAST

The sickness of Anna Little, leading lady of the Universal special feature company, caused Beatrice Van to take her place in a picture entitled "The Vagabond," in which she played opposite Herbert Rawlinson.

What "The Motion Picture News" Is and Means

Philadelphia, Pa., Sept. 10.
Editor, THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
New York City:

Sir.—I would like to express to you the help that THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS has been to me personally and also to say a word to you concerning the opinion of THE NEWS that I have heard among the Exchanges and exhibitors.

In the first place, on "The Barleycorn" campaign in Philadelphia I found your representative, Julian M. Solomon, Jr., a very live wire. If all of your other representatives are of the same caliber throughout the United States, attending to your trade paper notices with the same activity that they would if they were on daily newspapers, your paper must ever increasingly deserve its name THE NEWS, because it will be giving "news."

I can say to you in all frankness that the news story you printed of "Barleycorn" was the best news story that I have ever seen in a trade paper—and I speak from experience of over twenty-three years in the business.

When I came to Philadelphia recently on a campaign on "The Sea Wolf" for Bosworth, Inc., the manufacturers, the first thing I did was to go to Mr. Solomon's office and get his file of THE NEWS, because I felt that I would obtain valuable ideas to assist me in this campaign, and I was not disappointed.

The first article that I picked up was entitled "Advertising the Picture," by Frank P. Webb—full or such interesting matter that I felt it advisable to call it to the attention of several of the newspaper owners and managing editors, including George Ochs, managing editor of the Philadelphia Public Ledger and C. E. Shull, managing editor of the Philadelphia Bulletin.

I wish that this article could be reproduced and placed in the hands of the managing editor of every paper in the United States, because I feel that the newspapers are waking up to the value of the motion picture industry and are feeling their way as to how they can best establish motion picture departments.

If you reread Mr. Webb's splendid article you will notice that these are exactly the stages experienced by the Baltimore News until it woke up, and now it declares in your article:

"It (the Motion Picture Department) is a regular feature of our Sunday paper and one of the best we think that has ever been put into it. . . . It is our belief that this development is worth the while of any live, wide awake newspaper."

CARL H. PIERCE.

What such an article is worth to the newspapers of the country I leave it to any man gifted with a lively imagination to determine. But I foresee through just such articles a tremendous impetus along the entire line of the industry, and I am further convinced that a magazine which prints such valuable articles will maintain its precedence without difficulty.

The next article I picked up was by Mr. Hudson: "Why Exchanges Lose Business," and I wished as I read that article that every Exchange in this country might have a copy of it as an incentive to a similar initiative display by that exchange in going to the exhibitor, pointing out his mistakes, rectifying them and turning the most dissatisfied man on his books into a life long customer.

The next article I picked up was "How Mr. Pearce turned the poorest theatre in his town into the most profitable through rare initiative in the face of severe competition." Such articles are an inspiration to every exhibitor.

The next article was in the September 5 issue, on page 25, entitled "Fitting Films to a Filmless Community"—the experience of Mr. Blanchard in Vogalusa, La. This is a splendid story of how this man has made a success of the motion picture business with very small capital and against overwhelming odds, including the loss of his theatre by fire

Of course it would make too lengthy a letter to tell you of other articles like "A Tonic for a Run Down Theatre" and others which I have especially noted.

It would not be fair to assume that these are the only articles of interest, but rather that they are indicative of the character of articles you are putting into your paper, which are of paramount interest to the trade.

In speaking of Paramount, let me say to you please that Mr. Johnston's article in this week's MOTION PICTURE NEWS analyzing the Paramount program is the best analysis of its kind I have ever read anywhere.

It is thorough, dignified, analytical, and, to my mind, a very just tribute to the Paramount Pictures Corporation, which I firmly believe to be the right idea in the uplifting of the tone of motion picture plays and the bringing of the motion picture industry to a business basis which is fair and just to manufacturer, distributor, exchange and exhibitor.

Again I thank you for the co-operation which you have extended to Bosworth, Inc., in an effort to overrule censorship injustice.

Yours very truly,
CARL H. PIERCE.

MILWAUKEE FEELS SHY OVER FEATURES

Milwaukee, Wis., Sept. 10.
Editor, THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
New York City:

Dear Sir.—The life of the feature film man is not an easy one in this city.

Despite the fact that most of the big feature film companies are demanding that an exhibitor, to secure their releases, must tie himself up for a certain length of time, usually fifty-two weeks, and give the film a week's showing in the town, Milwaukee has not a picture house or a combination of picture houses that will play any feature for a week's time.

Two of the largest downtown houses, the Butterfly and the Alhambra, change their programs four times weekly and will not under any consideration play a picture longer.

The Orpheum, which up to a few weeks ago was Milwaukee's only feature house, is now playing vaudeville and pictures and has no room for a feature. The other of the downtown houses are all nickel houses and change their programs daily.

Unless the feature man is able to find an open week at the Davidson, the two-dollar house, and puts his attraction in on a percentage basis, he will have no place to house his feature. Owing to the fact that many of the smaller exhibitors and some of the big fellows refuse to book a feature until they have seen it, it is next to impossible to sign up a downtown house for two days and then play the outskirt houses for the balance of the week for a number of consecutive releases.

Of course, Milwaukee is not impossible and perhaps some live feature man is going to put it over in this city, but he will have his hands full doing it.

Truly yours, FEATURE.

PICTURES SAVE THEATRE

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Milwaukee, Wis., Sept. 15.

The European war has given to Milwaukee another picture house. The Pabst Theatre, the home of the German Stock company, has gone to pictures and is playing weekly features with good success considering the location.

For years the German Stock company has given a number of performances a week at the Pabst Theatre and it was impossible to secure the house for more than two days at a time. But the war changed all this and this year it has been found impossible to get enough of the actors back from Germany to organize the company.

It began to look as if the house would be dark all winter when a proposition was made the directors to play week stands of pictures.

"The Littlest Rebel" was the opening attraction and this was followed by "After the Ball." Though the theatre is over four blocks away from the theatrical district and the location has always been impossible for anything but concerts and the German Stock the pictures seem to be getting them.

It is a little early yet to say whether the photoplays will be a success, but everything points to it.

Features Crowding One-Reel Pictures in Buffalo

Public Does Not See Why It Should Pay $1.50 for "Legitimate" When Good Films Can Be Seen for Less

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Buffalo, Sept. 16.

"CAPACITY to the doors" has been the rule at Shea's Hippodrome since its opening.

Is this a proof that Buffalonians are willing to pay twenty-five cents for motion picture features? Some attribute this business to curiosity of those who, having heard of the beauties of this theatre, "want to see for themselves."

One thing is sure and that is that the outlying houses, especially the Elmwood, have not noticed any decrease in business; in fact, the Elmwood reports increasing receipts right along.

The downtown houses, with the exception of the Strand, are no doubt being affected by the Hippodrome. Theatres on Washington street, the Lyric and Family, the former with a stock company, are not doing very good; in fact, a local newspaper man, inquiring for the manager at the Family one day last week, had to wake up the ticket taker to get in.

The Strand management, knowing that he has an exceptional list of coming attractions, is not backward in publishing the fact, and when Buffalonians commence to inquire when Evelyn Thaw, Raymond Hitchcock and other artists are coming to the Strand, it shows that the publicity is having the desired effect. The price issue is playing an important part in Strand advertising, as that is the real thing that attracts these days, when everything is "going up."

There are still many five-cent houses in Buffalo, but they are not reporting phenomenal business. How long those on Main street will survive is only conjectural. It is the consensus of opinion among local exhibitors that the nickel house is approaching the end of its career.

Buffalonians are getting tired of looking at one-reel subjects; they want to see the features. One dollar and fifty cents for legitimate shows is rather steep at present, and theatregoers are accepting the larger photoplay houses as a very agreeable substitute for the "big shows."

The Star and Teck have not done any exceptional business since opening. These theatres present the big attractions "right out of New York." "They will get no more quarters of mine," as expressed by one man on Main street the other night, seems to voice the sentiment of motion picture Buffalo, as regards high-price admissions.

Cleveland Exhibitor Insists Upon Being Arrested

Samuel Bullock, in Order to Test Authority of Police, Who Arbitrarily Demand the Removal of "Crime Poster," Takes Stand

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Cleveland, Sept. 16.

IT is rather unusual for a business man to beg for arrest; further than that to insist upon being arrested. Yet Samuel Bullock of Cleveland made such a plea and was rewarded by the granting of his request.

Mr. Bullock is the proprietor of the Boulevard picture theatre at Lorain avenue and West Ninety-ninth street. Three days ago a policeman appeared in front of the theatre with the information that complaints had been received in reference to alleged "crime posters" in front of the house and that he had come in response to Chief Rowe's general order, to remove the offensive advertising.

Mr. Bullock notified the patrolman that he would permit the removal of the posters only under protest and with the understanding that he was to be arrested for exhibiting them.

The proprietor says that this is the only way in which the exhibitors can test Mayor Baker's right to prohibit the display of posters showing crime scenes. A test case will be made of the affair.

But Mr. Bullock is not the only man to be made a target of the new ruling. L. H. Scott, manager of the Bijou Dream theatre, 410 Euclid avenue, was ordered by Police Sergeant Burroughs to remove some large posters advertising a picture called "The Jack-Pot Club," because the paper showed men drinking and gambling.

Other pictures showing a patrolman victor in a desperate struggle with a prisoner and officer rolling about on the floor, Mr. Scott was informed, could not remain on display.

From which the exhibitors have come to deduce that posters showing vice rampant must be banished from public view. But posters depicting the triumph of the law, when the law is a blue-coated officer, may remain in sight.

Sergeant Burroughs acted on orders from Chief Rowe ordering the removal of objectionable posters. Chief Rowe also issued an order instructing policemen to see that all motion picture films exhibited in Cleveland have been approved by the state board of censors, and to make arrests if the law is not complied with.

Manager Scott says that the Motion Picture Exhibitor's League, of which he is a member, is preparing to take action on the removal of posters.

FREE TICKETS AND ICE CREAM FOR THE KIDDIES

"DADDY" F. E. GOFF, 2517 Franklin street, Omaha, Neb., pioneer motion picture exhibitor of the West and a leading exhibitor of Omaha, is planning an annual stunt that has gained him a city-wide recognition as "Daddy," and has probably swelled the attendance at his theatre during the past few years.

Every Fourth of July he entertains between two hundred and three hundred "kids" at a big lawn party at his home. After ice cream and cake, games and other amusements are indulged in, he sends them away happy with a ticket to his show. He has followed the idea for years.

His theatre, the Franklin, is at 1624 North Twenty-fourth street. He has operated it for five years.

For many years before that he traveled out of Omaha with one of the first moving picture machines ever used in this part of the country. In a black-topped tent he gave shows on Indian reservations, in ranch towns and in mining camps when moving pictures were only an experiment.

"In all my years of experience in the moving picture show business," he said, "I have found it pays to be attentive to the youngsters. And one of the best ways to get their friendship is to be their friend."

The title "Daddy" was also gained by caring for many homeless little waifs who were finding life a hard row to hoe.

"Daddy" Goff exhibited several pictures with his antiquated machine at the recent State convention at Grand Island. It is believed to be the first machine ever used in Nebraska and was hailed by the up-to-date exhibitors as a great curiosity.

PRIZES FOR PROGRAMS

W. H. CLUNE, owner and manager of three downtown retail-district theatres, in Los Angeles, gains much publicity for his largest house, the Auditorium, with a seating capacity of 2,500, by the programs. They are printed on heavy tinted cover paper, and give the titles of the features, the casts of each picture, and the musical program given by the twenty-piece orchestra. On the reverse side is the story of the pictures, and an advance announcement for the coming week.

At the top of the program, which is ten inches long and four inches wide, are two punched holes, and their presence attracts attention. At the bottom of the program is this: "Note—Retain this program for a collection to be filed in a handsome leather case that Mr. W. H. Clune will present each regular patron next Christmas."

"It is very surprising how much interest this small announcement has created," Mr. Clune said regarding the scheme. "Hardly an hour passes that people do not call at the box-office to see the sample cover on file, and every day we have some one coming in every little while to ask for a program of the previous week.

Mr. Clune also receives other benefit from the program in the form of advertising. Each week he has one of the large retail stores make a window display of articles appropriate to the film, and furnishes a number of photographs, with the title of the picture, and the name of his theatre printed upon them. In return for this he gives the store a mention on the program. Here is the one from last week:

"An 'Antony and Cleopatra,' the latest in scarfs and ties, can be secured at Mullen & Bluett's Fifth and Broadway. Price 50 cents."

LOCAL FILM BREAKS RECORD

ED. J. Butler, manager of the Ishpeming Theatre, Ishpeming, Mich., recently had a set of civic pictures produced, during the Sons of St. George convention, and the Upper Peninsula firemen's convention at Ishpeming, Mich. The pictures covered the doings at the conventions, including parades, races, and so on; also the industries and business sections of the city. They were shown for one week and broke all house records. The film was 3,500 feet in length and very clear and distinct.

MYSTERIOUS WOMAN IN BLACK MASK—WHO WAS SHE?

WHEN Manager F. O. Adler, of the Auditorium, at Riverside, Cal., advertised "The Million Dollar Mystery" recently, he made every man, woman and child of that city give attention; he even has the chief of police and all the pussy foots of the force out working, and the houses he has had since make him smile and smile and smile.

Three days before the appearance of the story in the Riverside Press, Mr Adler employed a woman to ride about the city wearing a black mask and black domino gown, such as described in the story and shown in the picture.

His press agent—a reporter for the Press—played up the stunt every evening and helped to agitate the people into believing she was the advance guard of a band of desperadoes from Arizona.

Interviews with the members of the police department regarding the strange woman were published, and on the night the first installment appeared in the newspaper, every other item in the reading columns, together with a big display, told the people who and why.

The following evening the first film of the series was shown at the Auditorium, but prior to the opening of the house, two buglers from the Riverside company of national guards, on horseback, and ten men in an open truck, all in black domino gowns and wearing masks, paraded through the principal streets, advertising "The Million Dollar Mystery" with big banners. Capacity houses greet Mr. Adler now every time he hangs out the serial picture paper.

ANOTHER PRIZE CONTEST

MANAGER WILLIAM ROPER, of the Roper Theatre of Council Bluffs, Ia., has started a business-getting plan he hopes will pack his house before it is ended. He is giving away a five-passenger Maxwell automobile as the first prize and two diamond rings as the second and third prizes in a coupon contest.

Attendance books are sold. They cost a dollar and contain ten admissions, to be used consecutively. With each book are given 500 coupons.

When each ticket is presented, five more coupons are given. When a ticket is purchased, five coupons are given. The coupons are votes. The candidate receiving the greatest number of votes gets the automobile.

Two men, engaged in the business, got him to try the plan. It will be a big advertisement, they say, and the extra large attendance will more than pay for the prizes. The two men do all the distributing of books and coupons.

The Besse Theatre in South Omaha, of which Mr. Adams is manager, is trying the same plan.

PHYSICIAN TALKS ON FILM

"THE ESCAPE," from the Paul Armstrong play of that name, the picture D. W. Griffith speaks of as his greatest achievement in films, attracted a great deal of attention at Clune's Auditorium Theatre, Los Angeles.

Mr. Clune issued invitations to many of the physicians, ministers and teachers of the city to attend as his guests, and at this performance Dr. A. B. Houghton, a leading physician, prior to the projection of the picture, gave an explanatory talk and emphasized the truth of the biblical mixim that the sins of the fathers are visited on the children.

Following each projection of the picture a transformation of three scenes depicting "True Love," "Babyhood" and "A Perfect Man" is given with very beautiful electrical effects.

The lobby display at the Auditorium recently consists of life-sized photographs of Blanche Sweet, Donald Crisp, Mae Marsh, Robert Harron and F. A. Turner, each in character as they appear in film production.

Twenty-inch advertisements were carried in the amusement section of local Sunday and Wednesday papers and followed by smaller copy during the week in both the morning and evening newspapers.

NEWSBOYS PARADE FOR PUBLICITY

THOUGH the stunt of inviting newsboys to the theatre as guests of the management to gain the publicity that the papers give in exchange is an old method of boosting attractions, George Pentergast, press agent of the Orpheum Theatre, Milwaukee, put it to a new turn recently, when he marched the newsboys of the "Sentinel" through the downtown streets headed by a band and bearing banners advertising the attraction at the house.

The parade attracted considerable attention and secured publicity for the week that could never have been secured in any other way. It is worth a trial in other cities.

Famous Players Releases "Such a Little Queen"

Mary Pickford in the Chief Role of Channing Pollock's Well Known Drama of Sentiment and Comedy

MARY PICKFORD makes the greatest impression of her career in Channing Pollock's famous play of comedy and sentiment, "Such a Little Queen," the Famous Players' release of September 21.

The theme of the play is the experience of a young queen, exiled from her kingdom by reasons of political dissension, who finds a refuge in America. Through a unique coincidence, the two toy kingdoms that create the foundation of the play are Herzegovina and Bosnia, the little countries that played such a tremendous part at the inception of the present European wars.

MARY PICKFORD IN "SUCH A LITTLE QUEEN"

For sheer charm of story, quaintness and daintiness of the central character, honest sentiment and impressive truths, "Such a Little Queen" is one of the greatest romantic successes of the present dramatic era.

There is something indescribably appealing in the personality of the little queen, as portrayed by "Little Mary." She has dignity and grace, gentleness of manner, charm and winsomeness, and she contrasts most effectively the moods identified with a situation in which disappointment and despair must be concealed under a pretense of cheerfulness and courage.

The little queen proves that there is not much real difference between royalty and the rest of humanity when they are wrecked by the buffets of circumstances.

The deposed queen, seen in the kitchen of a Harlem flat in her coronation robe, in order that her only street dress may retain its usefulness, frying the lamb-chops for her dinner and mashing the potatoes with her sceptre, jumping with fright at every blast of the dumb-waiter whistle, and putting her shoes in the ice-box, provides many of the humorous moments of the film.

The play may be characterized as a little of the tenderness and sweetness of life, put into dramatic expression. The Famous Players have gone to tremendous pains to invest the production, which is in five reels, with the dignity and pretentiousness which the atmosphere requires.

The true spirit of romance permeats the delightful play, and the clever star is equally effective in the humorous and serious episodes of the drama.

Mary Pickford's support is admirable, including such popular photo-players as Carlyle Blackwell, who appears in the role of Stephen, the Debonair, King of Bosnia, and Harold Lockwood, who impersonates a rugged young American.

Features and Educationals at Twenty-five Cents

Los Angeles Theatre, The Mozart, Devoted to Free Religious Pictures for Six Months, Enters Money-Making Class

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Los Angeles, Sept. 16.

THE Mozart Theatre, which for the past six months was used for showing Pastor Russell's "Creation," and where no admission fee was charged, has become a regular motion picture theatre, having been leased by Anna M. Mozart. The opening date for the house was set for September 21.

The Mozart, located on Grand avenue, below Seventh street, is two blocks south of the retail district, but as three of the principal retail stores are to move to the corner of Seventh and Grand as soon as the buildings are ready for occupancy, it is believed by motion picture men the theatre will become one of the most profitable in the city.

This house was conducted by Mrs. Mozart two or three years ago, and with vaudeville and pictures was made a very popular place. It is the intention of the management to show feature and educational pictures and the prices will be ten, fifteen and twenty-five cents.

Mrs. Mozart is now having built at Glendale, fifteen miles north of Los Angeles, with a population of 9,000, a $35,000 theatre.

IN THE EDUCATIONAL FIELD

Florida Superintendent of Public Instruction Recognizes in Films a Strong Ally for Teaching—Dramatic and Picturesque Features of History Made Vivid to Pupils, and Become a Valuable Aid to Text Book Instruction

"I THINK that the field for the educational motion picture is a great one and deserving of the careful attention of educators everywhere," says Fons A. Hathaway, superintendent of public instruction for Duval county, Florida, with headquarters in Jacksonville.

"I also think that comedies will continue to hold their favor with the masses," he continued. "Personally, when I go to a motion picture theatre I want something to rest my mind; something I can laugh at.

"By that I don't mean this silly stuff with neither point nor humor, which we so often have to sit through, but the wholesome, humorous comedy with plenty of funny situations in it that one may laugh at without being ashamed of oneself."

Superintendent Hathaway is in every way a practical school man, so a statement of this kind from him has real value. When he took the reins as superintendent of the Duval county public schools they were in a deplorable condition as the result of about twenty years of mismanagement, or no management at all.

IN the time he has held his present office, less than a year, he has not only raised the standards and brought the curriculum up to date, but he has been conducting a summer school for the grammar school teachers on normal school lines; has had the old sub school tax districts abolished, is at the present time working to have them re-established on a more sensible scale, and will soon be working to have the new Jacksonville district bonded for $1,000,000 for fireproof brick school buildings, more modern equipment, etc.

Furthermore, he is planning additions and improvements to the curriculum, and he has already made the Duval High School one of the best institutions of its kind in the state, and equal to any of the high schools in the larger Eastern cities.

This is the man who believes in comedies and educational pictures.

"I also like a good dramatic picture," he adds, "but I think that comedies will never fail to attract the people who spend the greater part of each day working in offices and factories.

"THE comedy, in my opinion, affords a relaxation that is not in the realm of a really good dramatic. The laughable picture rests one's mind and consequently sends one back to work with renewed vigor. And the beauty of it is that the evil effects of a stimulant that might secure the same results temporarily do not follow.

"When asked if he thought that the technique of photoplay writing would ever be taken up as a regular study in the public schools as original composition is today, Superintendent Hathaway stated that he thought it very likely, though he did not think that this new branch of creative work would be taken up universally for a number of years.

"The public is demanding a higher degree of efficiency in all fields of endeavor," he said in this connection. "The business world now recognizes the value of theoretical training and the idea that to enter some field of business endeavor, a boy must serve a period of apprenticeship is no longer held.

"Hence the business schools and business courses in the great colleges. In the beginning, lawyers ridiculed the idea of law schools. It was the same with almost all of the professions and many of the trades that have now become professions. Now nothing of the kind is the case; they demand the trained man with a foundation of theoretical knowledge of his work.

"IN other words, a demand was established and the school came along to fill that demand. Thus it was with the recently-established schools and special courses in journalism and, after a while, when the field of photoplay writing had been developed by the increasing demand for a higher standard of perfection, similar schools and special courses may be needed and will then be established for teaching a theoretical foundation of the work.

"It will also probably serve the same purpose in the public high schools, that of teaching original and individual thought, that the study of original composition is now doing. But I think it will be the same as it was in the case of original composition: the demand was first established and then the subject was put into the curriculums of the schools."

In speaking of what the moving pictures now mean to the public, he said: "The moving picture show, with the strict censorship, is doing a great deal toward raising the standards of the vaudeville and the 'legitimate' stage and, for that matter, practically all forms of public entertainment. They are accomplishing something in that way."

When asked his view of censorship, he stated that, while he had not gone deeply into the matter and would not like to be quoted as favoring or opposing any special form of censorship, he believed that a strict, though broad-minded censorship would always be a necessity.

AS to moving pictures being used in schools, churches and other similar institutions, Superintendent Hathaway said that, in his mind, there was no doubt whatever as to their value and future for educational work.

"The most effective way to teach is objectively, or by pictures, as has been proven many times," he continued, "and I am firm in the belief that this method of teaching will become universal, and not very many years from now, at that. I think that a projection machine and a screen are soon to become one of the essentials of the up-to-date school.

"In the public schools," he went on to explain, "I think the moving picture method of presenting subjects will prove most effective in the teaching of literature, history and kindred subjects. In literature, the classic studied would become more vivid and interesting and would therefore leave a more lasting impression. The pictures would have the same effect in the study of history, historical novels, etc.

"For example, the whole of the Revolutionary War could be reproduced in animated pictures and show serially by incidents and phases, and would undoubtedly prove much more effective than printed descriptions, though, of course, I believe that the study of the book should go along with the study of the picture.

"It would be more effective to show Washington crossing the Delaware than to read a description of his passage from a book without objective aid. Furthermore, while I have not gone very deeply into the matter, I should think that practically every subject now taught could be aided by moving pictures, and I feel sure the time is coming when such will be the case."

MACON, GA., THEATRE JUST FINISHED

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Atlanta, Ga., Sept. 16.

The Palace theatre building, at Macon, Ga., which has just been completed, is probably one of the handsomest motion picture houses in the south, outside of Atlanta.

The seating capacity is about 1,000.

PAN-AMERICAN STOCKHOLDERS MEET

A special meeting of the stockholders of the Pan-American Film Manufacturing Company, Inc., will be held at the offices of the corporation in Suite 902, 110 West Fortieth street, New York, on September 21 at 11 o'clock for the following purposes:

First—To receive the reports of the officers of the corporation for the period during which they have held their respective offices and to take such action with regard to such reports and the management of the corporation as the stockholders by a majority vote may deem proper.

Second—To inspect the minutes of meetings of board of directors held on June 1, June 2 and June 16 and to take such action with regard thereto as the stockholders by a majority vote shall deem advisable.

Third—To take any other action and to transact any other business that may properly come before the meeting.

WELL-KNOWN COAST MEN SEE "MONEY"

Special to The Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Sept. 14.

"Money," the multiple reel production of the United Keanograph Film Company, of Fairfax, Cal., was given its first official presentation in San Francisco, September 2.

D. J. Grauman and Sid Grauman, proprietors of the Savoy Theatre in that city placed the theatre at Mr. Keane's disposal for the morning exhibition.

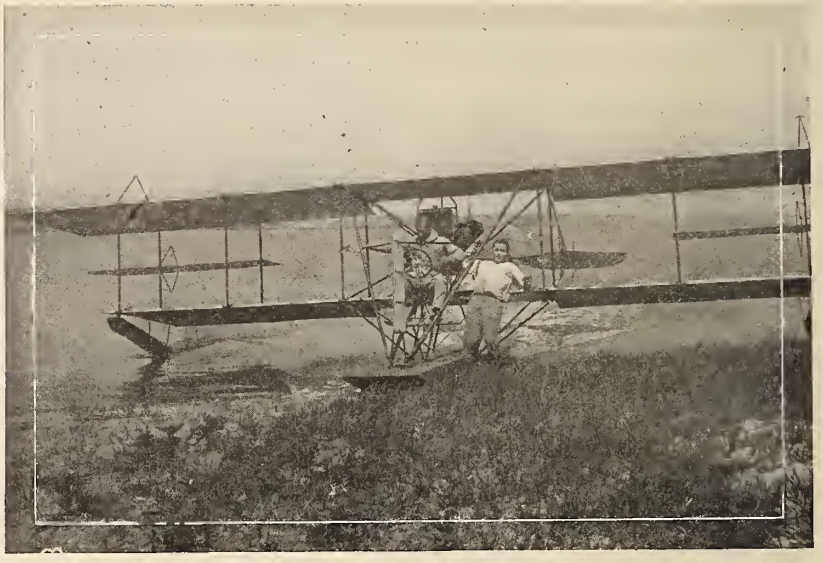
The spectators included Judge William P. Lawlor, the jurist who conducted the San Francisco graft trials; Andrew J. Gallagher, president of the San Francisco Labor Council; Ned Simmons, painter of the mural panels at the World's Fair, and Sol Lesser, the exchange man.

DENVER THEATRE COULD NOT MAKE FEATURES PAY

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Denver, Col., Sept. 14.

The Plaza Theatre, Denver, Col., which opened about three months ago as a high class feature playhouse, has discontinued its screen program and is presenting a stock musical attraction which was transferred from the Tabor Grand with the opening of that theatre's regular season.



The inability to secure sufficient big attractions to carry out the plans outlined by the management and the severe competition from the regular photoplay theatres presenting features at their regular admissions is attributed as the cause of the film discontinuance.

Denver photoplays fans are disappointed at the theatre's failure.

Actor Rescued by Hydroplanes for Play

George Larkin Filmed in Unique Situation for "Trey o' Hearts" Instalment After Diving 85 Feet from Ship's Yard-Arm

CLEAR grit to the backbone is every member of Wilfred Lucas' Gold Seal Company in the production of Louis Joseph Vance's "Trey o' Hearts" series. With the author and his imagination on the ground and with director Lucas lying awake nights thinking up new unheard-of "stunts" for the cast to perform, no one but a seasoned picture actor would be equal to the task.

GEORGE LARKIN AT A PERILOUS MOMENT IN THE FILMING OF "THE TREY O' HEARTS"

With each succeeding instalment, it would seem that every daredevil performance that human minds could conceive has been done and the cast hold their breath waiting anxiously for orders and wondering whether the author and director will be able to invent more adventures capable of being staged.

Already Miss Madison has been advised by General Manager Bernstein to call a halt and permit some one to double for her. But break down or no break down, the plucky little lead is not made of the sort of stuff that says die, and thus far she has absolutely refused to employ a double even in the more dangerous scenes.

George Larkin, who plays opposite her, is standing the ordeal very well, but as a result of a swim which he took in Newport Bay in the staging of the ninth instalment, he was for several days threatened with pneumonia. In connection with the production of this part of the film, it is an interesting fact that, so far as can be ascertained, Mr. Larkin at the time of his swim performed a feat for the story that has never been attempted previously, it is said, the boarding of a swiftly moving hydroplane from the water.

In the role of Alan Law, he dived 85 feet (highest dive ever made for pictures) from the yard-arm of a vessel and swam out into the bay where an aeronaut saw him and came to his rescue. Dropping his machine from a height of a hundred feet, the aeronaut came skimming over the water at a rate of some twenty miles an hour, and as he passed over Mr. Larkin's head, the swimmer grasped one of the braces and swung himself into the framework of the machine.

LAUNCH FILM COMPANY IN TEXAS

Special to The Motion Picture News.

San Antonio, Tex., Sept. 16.

A moving picture company composed entirely of San Antonians, whose pictures will all be of scenes laid in this city, has been formed here. Operations were commenced several weeks ago and the first picture, which will be shown at the Royal Theatre in the near future, has been taken.

The company is known as the Lone Star Company, and has the following officers: P. S. McGeeney, president; H. H. Smith, vice-president; Peter O'Brien, secretary and treasurer. The directors are: P. S. McGeeney, H. H. Smith, Peter O'Brien, Paul O'Brien and J. J. McManus.

"The Poisoned Pool" is the name of the first picture which has been taken. This is from the pen of P. S. McGeeney, who is the author of several books and moving picture scenarios. The actors are all San Antonians.

Arrangements are now being made for taking a picture of "The Round Up," which is also written by Mr. McGeeney.

SUCCESS WITH LOCAL EVENT FEATURES

SOME managers find that the local event feature pulls big business and in some localities will prove the making of a theatre that has tried outside features with indifferent success. On the other hand, the local event feature can pull, even where the theatre has been using big features and getting the crowds. Take, for instance, the Baby Parade and Contest in Hoboken on Wednesday, September 10.

Several thousand kiddies of Hoboken voted Manager Frank G. Hall, of the U. S. Theatre in Hoboken, the best ever when he sent representatives around both in and outside of the theatre with fancy hats and musical novelties as U. S. souvenirs of the Baby Parade. Hundreds of the youngsters promptly donned the hats and fell in line behind the regular parade, calling attention to Mr. Hall's souvenirs by blowing the whistles of the musical novelties with all their might.

Besides the parade itself, the souvenirs made about the biggest hit of the day, as far as the little folks are concerned.

MR. HALL also provided seats for nearly two hundred of his patrons in front of the theatre, giving an intermission to the matinee performance so that they might take in the pageant.

The taking of the pictures necessitated the use of three camera men and cameras. The camera men, after taking the pictures of the baby contest, snapped all the interesting features of the Baby Parade and the large throngs that visited the U. S. Theatre showed their approval in many ways. A good part of the audience were busy pointing out their friends in the screen and quite a few saw themselves in the movies.

The pictures were shown for five days, and from a box office standpoint left nothing to be desired. Another local event that was filmed by and shown at the U. S. Theatre was the Aquatic Sports of the U. S. Volunteers Life Saving Corps of Hoboken, taken on a Sunday at the Fifteenth street dock in Hoboken.

BABY PARADE DAY AT THE UNITED STATES THEATRE, HOBOKEN, N. J.

IN my opinion local event pictures can pull in any town or community where "everybody knows everybody else" and any theatre that has a steady local patronage and is not dependent on transient passersby, can make good by getting a film of any event and happening in his immediate vicinity where there is a chance of getting a few of his patrons in the picture.

In another article I will take up the souvenir question. This "evil" has some argument in its favor, but more against it and I have not space enough for it at this writing.

While I am on the local feature question I will mention another theatre in Hoboken that showed the Baby Contest and Parade pictures and give you the views of Mr. Bishop in features and kindred questions.

Henry Bishop, owner and manager of Bishop's Moving Picture Theatre at First and Washington streets, Hoboken, has learned many things about the business of managing a photoplay house since he first awakened his competitors in the down town section last summer.

Mr. Bishop was the first down town manager to adopt the special feature addition to his program, and some people thought he was making a big mistake when he made a flat entrance rate of five cents for his matinees, against the ten-cent evening price of admission.

But where he was presenting high-priced reels to matinee audiences of from forty to fifty people early in the history of his house, he is now playing to capacity houses nearly every afternoon, the crowd, as early in the week as Tuesday, standing in solid ranks to the sidewalk, a thing that is no longer unusual at his theatre.

"I CAN tell by the faces of my patrons as they come out whether the pictures have been satisfactory," said Mr. Bishop. "One of my steadfast patrons, a night worker who drops in several times during the week to the matinee performances, now that the reels are changed every day with special features for each day and who always tells me how much he enjoys the offering, came out early the other afternoon and was passing out without saying anything about the show. I stopped him and asked why he was going so early, and he said, 'Oh, I guess it will do me good to take a little nap before I go to work.'

"Now I knew that if the pictures had been all right he would not be leaving to take a nap in the middle of the afternoon show, but that his eyes would have been wide open and glued to the screen.

"So I went to locate the trouble and found out that a foreign reel of extra length was on and it was going slowly. That was all, but it was enough for him and incidentally for me. My one object is to give my patrons what they want, so long as they want pictures that are good.

"It is more to me to have my goods suit, I think, than it is for the merchant to sell the right kind of merchandise. If my patrons are not satisfied at the first glance that practically ends my chances with them.

"THAT is how I came to introduce the daily feature, changing the reels every day throughout, and always having an expensive feature for each day's show.

"'Yes,' in reply to a question, it's a big expense, but expense is a part of my business and it's a case of 'no expense, no business' I find.

"The first days of inflated profits in the moving picture business are past and it has gotten down now to legitimate profits. I do not mean the business has reached its greatest height yet—far from it—but the profits now are legitimate, as I said before."

Mr. Bishop was the first manager in Hoboken to see the possibilities of "The Perils of Pauline," which is running in serial form in the Sunday edition of the New York American, and is released on Mondays to the theatres. Mr. Bishop went to the managers of the production, as soon as he saw the wide advertising the American was giving the serial, and without any quibbling over prices signed the contract, which give him the feature on Tuesday so that he has no local competitors; the picture being released in New York only a day ahead of his showing. It is drawing capacity houses at this theatre.

"If you give the people what they want you'll get them," says the wide-awake manager of the Bishop Theatre.

Bosworth's New Studio Modern Throughout

The Last Word in Equipment—Considered Absolutely Fireproof—Company Filming "The Hypocrites," with Myrtle Stedman

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Los Angeles, Sept. 14.

THE producing companies of Bosworth, Inc., have begun work in the new studio of the company at Council and Occidental streets, which recently received the finishing touches, and was pronounced by motion picture men as one of the finest studios in the West.

The building is of Class A steel and concrete construction throughout, and as near fireproof as it can be made. The interior walls are finished with white concrete.

Particular attention has been paid to the laboratory and interior and exterior film storage vaults. These are of solid concrete reinforced with steel and lined with hollow tile.

There is three feet of air space between the ceiling and roof, and the ventilation is perfect. The property, wardrobe, and laboratory are all fitted with numerous automatic sprinkling devices.

"In the construction of this building," Frank Garbutt of the company stated, "I have tried to incorporate all the good features of all the studios of the country that I have visited, and I believe we have a motion picture manufacturing plant second to none.

"Mr. Bosworth and myself can feel sure that a fire at the plant, should we have one, will do damage in but one department. Everything has been arranged on an efficiency basis, and we will be able to produce pictures with the least amount of labor."

Regarding the scare relative to shortage of chemicals Mr. Garbutt added that the company had a supply on hand sufficient for one year.

Phillips Smalley and Lois Webber have completed the filming of "The Hypocrites," a five reel picture from a scenario by the latter.

Atlanta, Ga., Sept. 15.

City council is being urged to make an appropriation for presenting Atlanta in motion pictures at the San Francisco exposition and will decide the proposition at its next meeting. Several members have expressed themselves as favorable to the idea, believing it a splendid opportunity to gain for this city advertising which will attract conventions and new citizens, particularly manufacturers.

Working in conjunction with the Georgia commission to the exposition, the I. C. U. film company is making hundreds of films in Georgia. These will be presented free in the Georgia state building every day during the exposition.

Atlanta is asked only to pay the expense of making the films devoted to street scenes, public buildings and civic enterprises.

IMPORTANT PUBLICATIONS PRAISE LASKY

That artistry in photo-play production is one of the most powerful propellers toward recognition, is attested by the attention given "The Call of the North," the latest release of the Lasky Feature Play Company.

"The Independent," a semi-religious weekly, devoted two columns to a review by Doctor E. E. Slosson, literary editor. The "Theatre Magazine," a thirty-five-cent organ devoted to the higher class of theatricals, devotes a column to "The Call of the North" and another column to the doings of the Lasky company.

The New York "Sun" of Sunday, August 23, devoted a four-column article to the progress of motion pictures and the work of Cecil B. De Mille, while the New York "Times" printed on September 17 a long article by Mr. De Mille on the work of making "The Call of the North" and other Lasky plays.

FOUR THEATRES PLAN TO USE SAME PROGRAM

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Los Angeles, Sept. 14.

Managers of the theatres showing Paramount Pictures—Tally's Broadway, Majestic, Alhambra and Miller's—are considering a plan to issue a sixteen-page 6 x 9 program, to be compiled and published on a co-operative basis, and distributed at all four of these photo-play theatres.

It is the plan to carry stories of coming releases, in addition to the present programs, of the theatres. In recent Sunday papers these four theatres carried a big advertisement for the brand of pictures they are showing in connection with advertising matter for their respective programs.

How Exhibitors Advertise

WHEN THE MINISTER BOOSTS

RED CLOUD, Neb., has a decided Indian name. When G. J. Warren started a motion picture theatre there five years ago he thought he saw an advertising value in the name, so he called his theatre the Tepee. All over the state the Tepee is known now, and Mr. Warren is a vice-president of the State League.

But the name did not make him. For a long time he has been called the most particular customer of the various exchanges here. Everything had to be just right, or Mr. Warren would kick, and he would kick hard. And, although he is in a strict part of the state—as far as motion picture theatres are concerned—he got a boost last Sunday that few exhibitors get.

The Methodist minister of Red Cloud is a christian gentleman and an excellent preacher. And he told his regular congregation last Sunday morning, "The Tepee is a credit to Red Cloud, in its value for instruction and for clean entertainment for the children as well as the grown-ups."

The ordinary exhibitor would consider that an advertisement greatly to be desired. Mr. Warren did, too, but that was not the chief reason he felt delighted. He felt at last that his careful selection of films, his strict demands for the cleanest and best service, and his continual first thoughts of his patrons, were repaid. And he was in Omaha the other day crowing about it to the exchange managers.

"The Tepee is well advertised," said Mr. Warren to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative, "and it wasn't the favorable advertising so much. Why, the children of Red Cloud learn to say Tepee before they learn anything else. When they pass my place they say Tepee, although they are hardly able to say Mamma or Papa. That's the kind of place I run—such a place as the mothers and fathers of children are glad to have them come."

SYNOPSES IN DAILIES

ADVERTISING AS A LIFE-SAVER

AN exhibitor who evidently knows how to turn failure into success is Manager William Sipe, of the Unique Theatre, Fostoria, Ohio.

Harry Charnas, manager of the Cleveland exchange of Warner's Features, Inc., writes that until Mr. Sipe took hold of the Unique, it had always been a "notorious lemon."

"Now," says Mr. Charnas, "it is the talk of the town—a fact admitted even by his competitors."

Mr. Sipe's first step was to book a daily change service of Warner's Features, and his second was to advertise broadcast. The above photograph shows Mr. Sipe with his advertising automobile in front of his theatre. The auto is covered with "Zingo" paper—a Warner's serial.

MANAGER SIPE READY TO LEAVE THE UNIQUE ON AN ADVERTISING TRIP AROUND FOSTORIA.

Mr. Charnas adds that "Mr. Sipe's success proves a hustler can get blood from a stone, providing he has the right article to do it with."

ADVERTISING SLIDES PAY THE RENT

HERE'S the story of a Western exhibitor who uses advertising slides and makes them pay.

"They pay the rent, and my patrons never object to them," is his own statement.

E. E. McVicker, proprietor of the Rex Theatre, Twenty-fourth street and Broadway, Council Bluffs—just across the river from Omaha—used to be partner in a motion picture theatre at New Rockford, N. D.

"Those were the early days," he said, "and we ran as high as thirty-three advertising slides at each show. Now it's different.

"My modernized idea is to run fewer of those slides and charge more for the few. I have studied the situation and I believe the use of advertisement slides is a good proposition for small town and suburban theatres."

The Rex is a specially built house for motion pictures. It seats 150 people. He shows four films and two advertising slides between each film. He charges $3 a month to show the slides. The rent for the house is $25 a month—and there you are.

The advertisers pay for the slides at the rate of 75 cents apiece. Mr. McVicker has the catalogue which covers every kind of business. I saw the show immediately after talking to him. Among the advertisers were a dealer in sand, cement and building material, a tailor, a grocer, a home laundry, a piano mover and drayman, a furniture dealer, a drug store, and a piano house.

There were also several Rex Theatre slides; one of the "Welcome," one saying, "Tell the merchant you saw his advertisement here," and another announcing the coming attractions.

"I have come to the conclusion, after careful observation and talk with my patrons, that they would much rather look at an attractive advertising slide than at the blank screen. Then, too, I induce my advertisers to frequently renew their slides, and to get the most catchy ones possible, so that they will not become monotonous to my constant patrons. It is for the advertiser's benefit, as well as for my own, and he readily sees it."

With two exceptions, the advertisements thrown on the Rex screen are of merchants in the vicinity. It is a community theatre and the advertisers are people in the community. They are known by everybody; everybody sees their advertisement, and they are kept before the minds of the people who must be their customers.

There is another phase to the business, too. The merchants whose advertisements are used are not the heads of huge businesses. They have small establishments and still possess that desire to see their names in big, black, red, purple or some other colored letters. The night I was at the Rex the tailor was there with his wife and six children. And when his advertisement was thrown on the screen you could see him straighten his back and look like the world was his to do with as he pleased!

And Mr. McVicker says the groceryman, the dealer in building materials, the druggist and all the others come one or more times every week and help swell his attendance. And they bring their friends, and they tell their friends about the Rex—all of which is good advertising.

Mr. McVicker never has trouble keeping his eight advertising slides filled. If one of the advertisers begins to think it is not paying, there is a waiting list from which to choose a new slide and a new advertiser. The coal dealer has been worrying himself sick in an effort to get his advertisement on the screen before the coal season opens!

It doesn't take time. Mr. McVicker has only one machine for such a small house and while changing the films he can put a slide in and take another out in an instant, leaving it there while he works at the film. That gives plenty of time for it to be read.

Cincinnati Patrons Tired of "War" Pictures

Exchange Manager Sees Reaction in Public Taste—Ohio Exhibitors Complain of Censor Board's Dilatory Methods

Special to The Motion Picture News

Cincinnati, Sept. 16.

THE psychological effect of the European war has entered into the motion picture business in Cincinnati. Three weeks ago there was a universal demand for war pictures. Today the war pictures are not wanted.

Exchange men hustled to supply the demand and the market was flooded with films that graphically depicted countless imaginary scenes of daring on the field of battle, army and naval strategy and frightful carnage. These are now a drug on the market, because the public evidently is tired of war.

"Possibly the general public is beginning to realize that war is not pleasant to contemplate, even on a motion picture screen," said an exchange manager.

"They probably have felt the results of the great conflict, as it has affected business interests in America, and so the pictures have become distasteful to them. Or perhaps the newspapers are giving them such heroic doses of war news that their nervous systems can stand no more. At any rate, the pendulum is swinging back again and the fickle public is demanding films of a more peaceful character."

The censorship question remains as it was. Exhibitors are still complaining about their releases being held up as the result of failure on the part of the State Board of Censors to furnish leaders in time for the exchanges to fulfil their contracts.

G. T. Sharp, proprietor of the Hippodrome Theatre at Springfield, Ohio, was among the exhibitors forced to make hurried trips to Cincinnati this week to arrange for programs to replace those ordered, which had been held up for the arrival of leaders.

S. G. Hatch, special feature manager for the Universal Company, and formerly manager of the General Film Company here, has left Cincinnati to take charge of the Mutual office at Portland, Me.

Motion pictures of Cincinnati and her industries, attractions and amusements, gathered by the Chamber of Commerce of this city for publicity purposes, are being shown throughout this and neighboring States. They were displayed recently in connection with the Eagles' celebration at Aurora, Ind.

Principals of the Cincinnati schools and teachers of history in the high schools, were the guests of Manager John H. Havlin, of the Grand Opera House, one day this week, and witnessed a special performance of the historical photo-drama, "Cabiria," which is being shown at his theatre.

The feature has been unusually successful and will fill another engagement at the theatre. The purpose of bringing the pedagogues to see the picture was to interest them in its historical value. As a result, many school children and high school students were among the audiences.

As an addition to the demonstration features of the University of Cincinnati to be shown by motion pictures during the fall and winter terms, films depicting the electrolysis of metals, displayed here at the Lyric Theatre in connection with the Howe pictures, are to be presented to the institution by C. Hubert Heuck, manager of the Lyric.

Mr. Heuck has written to Lyman H. Howe, owner of the pictures, for copies of the film.

August Muller, manager of Warner's Features, has returned to Cincinnati from Charleston, W. Va., where he established a branch exchange in charge of H. S. Peed.

FILM COMPANY MOVES TO COLUMBUS

The Edwards-Zetler Feature Film Company, which was a year old in August and had its headquarters at Dayton, Ohio, for the past year, has moved its exchange to Columbus, Ohio.

The Edwards-Zetler Film Company started out in a small way a year ago and has had phenomenal success, as it is one of the biggest in the State and has accumulated sixty features.

The aim is to give the people the best films available for the money. The reason for moving to Columbus was on account of better shipping facilities and more central location. It will open up branch offices in Cincinnati and Cleveland in the very near future.

The company will release seven comedies a week and one or two features.

BLAKE'S GARDEN PATRONS PREFER HIGHER ADMISSION

Special to The Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Sept. 14.

Manager C. W. Blake, of Blake's Garden Theatre, San Pedro and Twelfth streets, Los Angeles, has come to the conclusion that it is folly to try to operate a motion picture theatre in a residence neighborhood for less than 10 cents admission.

Three months ago Mr. Blake reduced the price from 10 cents, and now he has raised it back to the original price. He finds the attendance is practically as good now as when but 5 cents was charged, and his old customers keep coming, with now and then an exceptional one, who balks.

Music and the Picture

Editor's Note.—This department is prepared to answer all questions from exhibitors relating to the use of music in connection with photoplays, and to suggest suitable music for current pictures. Correspondence will be welcomed

Dramatic Value of Sharps and Flats

By E. A. AHERN

MISS ALICE S. BURTON, of Honolulu, Hawaii, writes:

"I have been reading your articles in THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS and am quite interested, as I have been playing the pictures here for the last four years.

"I would like to ask a few questions and would appreciate a reply through the columns of THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

"First—Do you think it possible for a pianist to take a piece of music, for instance, 'Indian summer,' and make a dramatical composition to fit an Indian picture and fit scenes that have fights, horses running, war whoops, etc., using one piece only, modulating your key and having the music to blend with the action of the player?

"SECOND—Do you think any of the musical pieces for the accompaniment pictures, either classic or comedy, fits the pictures in every detail?

"Third—Do you think any one key is adapted to certain pictures, namely, G or D minor for Irish, which suits comedy the best? Do sharps suit any certain pictures better than others?

"I would appreciate your ideas on these questions; also the address of some music publishers that carry a line of music specially for the picture pianist."

In answer to your first question I refer you to the June issue of the NEWS.

In my article of that date I described how I played "Indian Summer" to fit the action of the players, first adagio, then mysterious, by changing the tempo and diminishing to P. P.

IF I am playing an Indian picture and there is a war dance shown I interpolate a few war whoops in 8 va., treble clef, or on any such picture. I do this, that is, where there is any possible chance. This helps give the atmosphere.

I do not believe it practicable to play only one piece, even if one does change the tempo and register, for the reason that the same melody would get tiresome even though it was in keeping with the picture.

To make my ideas on this a little clearer and also to show another way of changing the tempo was the use of "Hero of the Balkans" for "Lucille Love," Series No. 3, where Loubeque was putting some snakes in Lucille's hat through the wall, I played this piece, staccato and andante.

To fit all of these few scenes I played this, "Hero of the Balkans," through once, then the action became too fast to follow in the tempo (the music was written 6-8). I changed this tempo to 2-4, making it easier to keep up with the action.

Do you see now? First in 6-8 slow through once repeated in 2-4 once.

AS to question No. 2, it all depends upon how well we can select our music to fit the pictures, whether a musical composition will fit a picture in every detail or not.

This is one of the "knacks" of playing the pictures. In one of my recent articles I showed how I used "Prayer and Passion" to accompany a picture and play to detail, also how I used the music of "Gypsy Love" to fit a picture.

But, as I say, this is a trick which one has to acquire by studying one's music, knowing how many different movements there are in a certain piece of music.

I do not believe every pianist can play for pictures even though he be good at reading or execution. Picture playing is different from any other line of musical endeavor, as there are other things to watch besides the music.

IN answering No. 3 I am giving my own experiences, as this is not authentic.

I have found the relative minor to D major, B minor adapts itself to weird pictures, such as snaky or ghostly, like the crocodile scene in "Anthony and Cleopatra," or the burial scene in "Monte Cristo," where the body of the supposed dead man is thrown into the sea in a sack.

The relative minor to A flat major, F minor fits heavy dramatic pictures, such enormous fire scenes as in the "Vengeance of Durand."

D minor seems to suit Oriental and sometimes I use it for "Burgal" scenes. In all the old-time Irish fiddlers I generally ask the pianist to "fake a chord" in C and A minor.

Aside from the mentioned few keys I am not familiar with any other keys.

WHEN I have any "early period" picture, say, Roman or the like, I use music written sharps; that is where any of the Arena or Gladiator scenes are mostly "chords" with not too much melody, but kind of "Maestoso," such as the "Coronation March" in 4 sharps from the "Prophet," by Meyerbeer.

I do not know of any music house that makes a specialty of picture music, although nearly any publisher can supply you the incidental music. Some day the music publishers will wake up to the fact that there are numerous picture theatres in the United States and that many employ pianists, who are looking for music to fit the pictures and will advertise their publications in such papers as THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS where one can see what they have to sell.

Song hits are easy to obtain, but I find it hard to get instrumental music, especially new music.

MULTIPLE AND SINGLE REEL COMPANIES COMBINE

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Los Angeles, Sept. 14.

The Union Film and Supply Company, Los Angeles branch, and that of the Independent Film Company have been merged and now occupy the quarters of the Union company at 738 South Olive street, Los Angeles.

As the Union heretofore handled only multiple reel features, and the Independent only single and double reel pictures, it will now be possible for the consolidated companies to furnish a complete daily change, four-reel program.

Harry Hunter, who was manager of the Independent, has taken charge of the consolidated exchange. The road trips will be made by men of the San Francisco branch of the Union Film and Supply Company of which O. V. Traggard is president and general manager.

"AN ODYSSEY OF THE NORTH" MAKES HIT

The latest Bosworth release, "An Odyssey of the North," opened Sunday, September 13, at the Strand Theatre, New York City, as the initial New York presentation of a Bosworth production in the Paramount Program.

At 8:30 p. m. the enormous auditorium was filled to the doors, and the standees were flooding the lobby to such an extent that it was necessary to rope off a passageway for those in the theatre to leave by.

Shortly afterwards it was necessary to stop the sale of tickets until the close of the first performance. At 9:20 the house emptied out at the close of the first show and the crowds waiting to enter completely jammed the house for the second time.

Hobart Bosworth playing the part of Naass, the leading role, in this Jack London epic, made a distinct character creation, and displayed wonderful ability in his delineation of the emotions of the South Sea Islander who pursues his enemy around the world.

The audience gave the picture earnest attention, and at the finish applauded it enthusiastically.

MAKE REPLICA OF CAROLINA BUILDING

Special to The Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Sept. 14.

Director-General David W. Griffith and a company of 75 people, together with a number of horses and a complete camping outfit, are at Bear Lake Valley, which is at an altitude of 6,000 feet, where they will spend a week making scenes for "The Clansman."

In the absence of Mr. Griffith a score of carpenters, metal workers, and papier mache makers are busy in the construction of the capitol building of South Carolina, on the Majestic-Reliance studio grounds.

This will be an exact reproduction of the building at Columbia, S. C., which has stood since before the Civil War, and will be made from plans and photographs secured by wiring the Columbia State, a newspaper of Columbia.

Gaby Deslys Film Smuggled Past Watchful Eyes

Two French Messengers Undertake the Hazardous Job of Outwitting Military Authorities to Get Picture Out of the Country

"HOW they brought the news from Ghent," the heretofore classic war line, must now be relegated among the memoirs of ancient wars in favor of the latest military parable, "How they brought the film from Paris," and more particularly the Gaby Deslys film.

SCENE FROM THE FAMOUS PLAYERS' FILM IN WHICH GABY DESLYS IS STARRING

Two special French messengers were engaged by the London manager of the Famous Players to conduct this delicate and difficult mission, and in the guise of volunteers on their way to join their regiment at Calais, it is said that they made the long journey on foot with the reels of film wrapped closely around their bodies.

Arrived at Calais, they made their way across the channel to Dover, changing their identities on this route to English messengers in the employ of the London branch of the Famous Players, and thence to London and Liverpool, where they embarked, still enveloped in the film under their clothes, on board the "Celtic," which arrived in port last Friday.

The subject in which Gaby Deslys is to be presented to the motion picture public is an original conception written around the star, entitled "Her Triumph." The play is a drama of the theatre, and so constructed as to permit Gaby many opportunities for the display of her talents. Harry Pilcer also appears in the production in support of the international star.

Hottest Month on Coast Brings Record Business

Grand, in Los Angeles, Fills All Its Seats in Defiance of the Mercury on Sunday, "Children's Day"

Special to The Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Sept. 14.

THIS is the hottest month in the year at Los Angeles, and although the word "unusual" is overworked in Southern California with regard to climate when a shower or cold spell hits this semi-tropical section, it can be used now appropriately, for September so far has been a scorcher.

But in the face of this the Grand Theatre, with nine hundred seats, located on Main street, near First, last Saturday and Sunday played to its greatest business since becoming a motion picture house, eighteen months ago. On Sunday there were 4,780 paid admissions, and nearly that many the day before.

The program Sunday included "The Kaiser's Challenge," of 1,200 feet, together with five other reels. An admission of five cents was charged. The Saturday feature was an Al Christie Nestor comedy of two reels, with paper that suited the neighborhood.

COAST HOUSE WILL COST $150,000

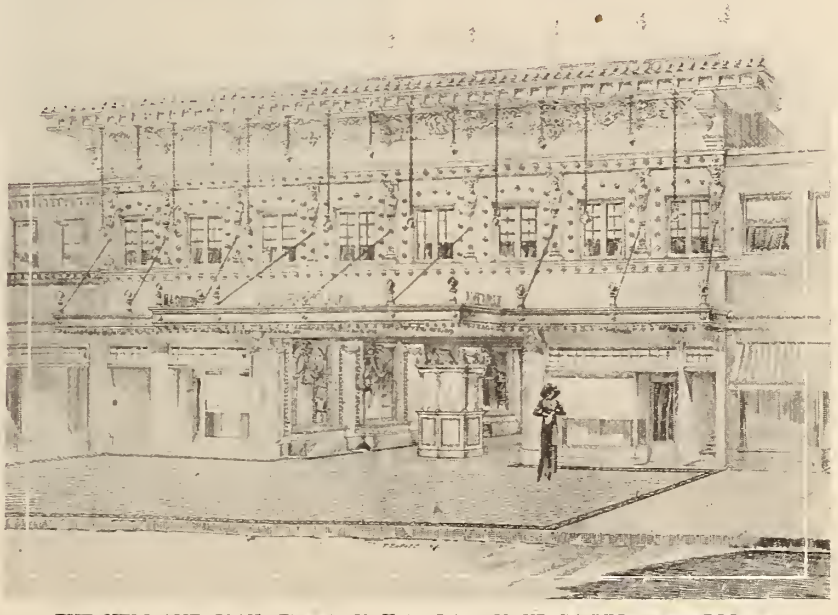
ARCHITECT IRVING J. GILL has prepared sketches for a concrete and steel theatre building, to be erected at Pine avenue and Fourth street, Long Beach, Cal., for Homer Laughlin, Jr., of Los Angeles. Archie Levy, the theatrical manager, who expects to lease the theatre, states that the proposed building will cost from $135,000 to $150,000, and the furnishings and equipment will cost about $38,000.

The sketches provide for a theatre seating about 1,300, with a three-story front, which will contain a cafe, grill and dance hall.

It is proposed to finance the project by the issuance of $120,000 bonds, Mr. Laughlin putting in $53,000 of his own money and the ground.

$40,000 HOUSE PLANNED IN LOUISVILLE

PLANS are being drawn for a new motion picture theatre in Louisville, Ky., which, it is estimated, will cost $40,000. The proposed theatre will be erected at Second and Magnolia streets which is in the very heart of an aristocratic residence district.



Only high class, principally feature, films will be shown in keeping with the patronage to which the house will cater. The new house will be built and operated by the Broadway Amusement Company, a corporation which already controls a chain of five theatres in this city. A site has been purchased and application made for a building permit.

The theatre will have a seating capacity of 1,200 with an adjoining summer airdome which will seat 1,500 additional.

WEST VIRGINIA HOUSE NEAR COMPLETION

McMECHEN, W. Va., is shortly to have a new and up-to-date fireproof motion picture theatre. The contractors on the work are rushing the building to completion. It is being built for B. H. Bliske, of the Wheeling branch of the Pittsburgh Independent Film Company, and will be 58 by 108 feet, and is located at Marshall and Ninth streets.

NEW $50,000 HOUSE IN TERRE HAUTE

THE NEW AMERICAN, TERRE HAUTE, IND., MAURICE LESS, PROPRIETOR.

THE Lyric Theatre, Terre Haute, Ind., which will open November 1, will have a seating capacity of 1,050 with a balcony arranged with box front. The first floor will also have forty boxes.

The theatre building will cost $50,000 and the ground is valued at $50,000. Theatre is incorporated under the name of American Theatre. Maurice Less is president.

THEATRES HERE AND THERE

RICHARD DIAMOND and J. F. Deckard are to open a new motion picture theatre at Havana, Ill. Fred Fette is remodeling his Main street building for them. The entire front is to be new, and the interior refinished. All modern conveniences will be installed in the new motion picture house, and everything will be done to make it as attractive as possible.

Jerseyville, Ill., is to have a new motion picture theatre within the next few weeks. The new picture playhouse will be conducted by Walter Twoomey and Thomas Lyons, both local men, and will be located in the Robb building. The building is being remodeled, and when completed will be the finest motion picture theatre in Jerseyville.

W. W. Wolfe and A. A. Rose, of Champaign, Ill., will open a new motion picture theatre in that city on October 1. It will be located in the Ludwig building, corner Main and Water streets, and will be thoroughly modern. It is to have a seating capacity of 375.

A new moving picture house is to be built at Canonsburg, Pa. It will be located on East Pike street and will be known as The Star and will be managed by A. M. Forsythe, who is also the owner. It will be forty-three by seventy feet and will be modern in every respect.

The building will be of brick and will be fireproof throughout and the operating room will be on the roof. The fire exits will be numerous and the aisles will be so wide that the building can be emptied in a few minutes.

The building is so arranged that a large gallery can be added later without interfering in any way with the remainder of the building.

Ground was broken several days ago for the new theatre at Broadway and Heywood streets, Sharon, Pa. The Farrell building company was awarded the contact for the erection of the theatre.

T. J. Burke, of Pittsburgh, is the owner of the property and he expects to open the theatre early this winter. It will have a seating capacity of 700 and when completed will cost $12,000.

ALHAMBRA, WILKES-BARRE, IS SOLD AGAIN

SEVERAL weeks ago the Wilkes-Barre, Pa., correspondent of The Motion Picture News announced in his trade story that one theatre in this city would be sold in the near future. The deal was consummated when the Alhambra Theatre, Public square, seating capacity of nearly five hundred, passed into the hands of Clayton Heebner, former manager of the house.

Mr. Heebner purchased the Alhambra from Charles Bartholomew, who was a clerk at the Redington Hotel, where the Pennsylvania State convention was held last June.

The sale of the Alhambra to Mr. Bartholomew was announced in this magazine last May, when he purchased it from the Posten Brothers.

THEATRE FOR LOUISVILLE PARK

THE management of the Woodland Park Airdome, Louisville, Ky., is planning to erect a new theatre in its park at the end of the present summer season and continue in the business throughout the winter months.

The proposed theatre will have a seating capacity of about 1,500, and the plans call for a dance hall adjoining, where the devotees of Terpsichore may find entertainment at the conclusion of the picture show.

As an advertisement, and in an effort to draw patronage, the management of the park has been giving away from $1 to $100 in surety coupons to each patron of the park every Wednesday night this season.

OHIO THEATRE READY IN OCTOBER

ELABORATE preparations are being made for the formal opening of the Market Street Theatre, Youngstown, O., which is now under construction and which will be ready Friday, October 11. This new playhouse will be one of the finest in the city. It will have a capacity of 600 and is fitted with modern seats which are both roomy and comfortable.

Next Lasky Release a Chester Novel

"The Making of Bobby Burnit" Stars Edward Abeles—Theodore Roberts and Bessie Bariscale Give Excellent Support

"THE Making of Bobby Burnit," the next release of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company through the Paramount Pictures Corporation, will feature Edward Abeles, who created so profound an impression by his work in Lasky's "Brewster's Millions," the second production of that concern.

"The Making of Bobby Burnit" as a story ran serially in The Saturday Evening Post and enjoyed wide sales as a novel.

George Randolph Chester, responsible for "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" and other famous fiction, is the author of "The Making of Bobby Burnit," and Winchell Smith, author of "Brewster's Millions" in play form, was the author of the stage version which enjoyed a popular run at the Republic Theatre, under the Henry B. Harris management, several years ago.

Dallas Exhibitors Take in $25,000 a Week

Figures Compiled by J. S. Philips, Secretary of the Texas League—Patrons Are Willing to Pay for the Best Films

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Dallas, Texas, Sept. 16.

ACCORDING to figures prepared by J. S. Philips, secretary of the Texas Exhibitors' League and vice president of the National League, the film business done in Dallas each week amounts to at least $25,000.

It will be shown by these figures that Dallas is easily the center of the film business in Texas. A little more than three years ago Dallas possessed only a real film exchange with a release of eighteen films per week.

This company was the General Film Company and handled only licensed pictures. A few months later several other firms opened here and now an exhibitor can secure almost anything he desires.

In speaking of the film business in Dallas Mr. Philips says:

"The film market of Dallas has now reached the standard of commercialism in the state as far as output is concerned and no exhibitors is necessarally forced to purchase films he does not desire.

"The motion picture patrons have become so educated that when they sit and view a picture on the screen they can tell you whether it is cheap, shoddy and cotton goods or whether it is all wool and a yard wide."

Vol. X September 26, 1914 No. 12

A Season of Higher Prices

THE coming season is going to be, among other things, a season of higher prices at the box-office, a season in which the exhibitor will awaken, as he has already begun to do, to the higher intrinsic value of the photoplays he is offering the public, and will dignify them by raising his prices of admission.

IT is time that this should come to pass. Indeed, the photoplaygoing public has reached the point where it is actually ready to pay more to see a motion picture entertainment than the exhibitor has in many cases dared to ask.

WITNESS the case of the Cincinnati exhibitor cited in the pages of this issue of THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Ten cents was the price on which he had built up a clientele. He tried the experiment of lowering his price to a nickel, and very nearly lost every patron.

To use his own words: "The show was too cheap for them."

AS a matter of fact, the motion picture theatre has outgrown the nickel stage.

That does not mean that the nickel theatre has ceased to exist.

But it does mean that the public insists upon having the best in pictures, that the exhibitor can no longer give the best pictures he can obtain for five cents—and that the leading theatres of practically every community in the United States have broken away from the nickel scale, and are selling ten, fifteen and twenty-five cent pictures to a ten, fifteen and twenty-five cent public.

PICTURES that could not be made on a nickel basis have created the demand for such pictures to the exclusion of the five-cent film, to designate it by its retail price, and at the same time have drawn away from the legitimate theatre a class of patrons who looked with contempt upon a nickelette.

Novelty and the nickel once went hand in hand.

But today the demand for quality has taken the place of the demand for novelty in the motion picture theatre.

The motion picture has become an established form of amusement.

ITS purveyors must cease to calculate how large a quantity of films they can give for the lowest possible figure, and reckon upon how meritorious a program they can offer at a figure proportionate to the quality of the offering.

They owe it to the public.

They owe it to the industry at large.

They owe it to themselves.

Temporary Fluctuation

A SLIGHT slump in patronage in some of the Northern states during the last few days has caused some anxiety among exhibitors. They complain that the falling off of attendance is due to the war in its supposed depression of industries generally.

The fear is groundless.

The season, not the war is responsible.

JUST now with the uncertainties of the weather confronting exhibitors the receipts must necessarily fluctuate from day to day and night to night.

Then in the case of the closed theatres the vagaries of the weather affect the attendance fully as much. While people are kept away from the airdome on account of the chilly air, they have not had time to accustom themselves to the idea of sitting inside for a performance.

OF course, those who have been frequenting the enclosed houses during the whole season because of superior cooling and ventilating systems making the theatres as attractive as the airdomes, naturally have not been influenced one way or the other. Fortunately this unwelcome condition lasts only about two or three weeks. After that with the advent of the regular fall season business will go forward with a rush.

Bankers Make Plea to Film Manufacturers

Ask for Suppression of Scenes Depicting Successful Peculations by Officials —Depositors Supposed to Lose Confidence

J. B. STIRLING, president of the First National Bank of Jackson, Miss., the Union Savings & Deposit Bank of Jackson, Miss., and the Pickens Bank, and formerly connected with several other banking institutions in Mississippi and Louisiana, commenting upon the movement on the part of the Savings Bank Section of the American Bankers' Association to have all members, and in fact, all banks carrying savings deposits in the United States, adopt the motion picture method of advertisement, said:

"Of course, it is the object of all banks, and particularly the savings banks of the United States, to induce the people to conserve their resources and save their money, and particularly to encourage the accumulation of small deposits by persons working for a salary, and others to whom it is all important that some money be laid up in anticipation of possible misfortune or want.

"These accumulations are further advocated for the reason that homes may be eventually obtained by this means, and if funds are so deposited the accumulator will be ready to invest in some remunerative security, after a reasonable amount is accumulated in the bank, and when the occasion offers, and at a greater rate of interest than can be obtained from the bank, such investments being entirely out of reach until reasonable sums are accumulated.

"To obtain these deposits and get the people to adopt the savings bank method of providing for their future, banks indulge in a good deal of advertisement, and doubtless will freely use the motion picture method; but we think that little can be accomplished along this line unless the exhibitors of pictures and the film manufacturers can be induced to desist from displaying before the public pictures they are now exhibiting, throwing in bold relief and calling to the special attention of the public, peculations of bank officials and the too-often occurring bank failures.

"These misfortunes will occur, and they are condemned no more severely by anyone than by bankers doing a legitimate banking business, and those bankers are generally always willing to contribute of their resources to see that felons and embezzlers are brought to justice.

"More strict examination and supervision are constantly being inaugurated by both the national and state governments to prevent such occurrences, and all agree that they cannot be too strongly condemned.

"But to throw pictures on the screens of the motion picture houses, reproducing what purport to be illustrations of bank failures, where the officers continue to live in ease and affluence, and leave the depositors to suffer, is certainly a great deterrent to the placing of their deposits in the banks by the small earners.

"If all the people hoarded their money and refrained from doing a banking business for fear the bank might break, and their money be lost, we would have to restrict the business of the United States about ninety-five per cent.

"It is to the interest of all that business should not be so restricted, but, on the contrary, that all of us should keep our money in the banks, even if some few occasionally, through misplaced confidence, lose our accumulations. Some will always be found unworthy; but, like the 'black sheep in the family,' the least said about them, the better."

WORLD FILM HEAD VISITS DETROIT

Special to The Motion Picture News

Detroit, Sept. 14.

L. J. Selznick, president of the World Film Corporation, visited Detroit decently and was delighted with the quarters which have been provided for the Detroit exchange of the corporation.

It has been removed to the fourth floor of 97 Woodward avenue, a building which houses several other film concerns. Well lighted and attractively furnished front offices have been provided.

There is a large room for the paper, and at the rear a light and airy room for inspection work. To one side a room has been fitted up for projection, with theatre chairs for the exhibitors who drop in to see a picture run off. The exchange occupies the entire floor.

Mr. Selznick was accompanied by his personal representative. E. D. Selden, on the trip.

Instrument Manufacturer a Hold-Up Victim

Deagan Looks Down a Rifle Barrel in Yellowstone Park—No "Yellow," However, In the Party

J. C. DEAGAN, of Chicago, manufacturer of the world-famous Deagan Bells, has just returned from an extended trip throughout the West. The objective point of his trip was a visit through Yellowstone Park, and while there he had an experience which is a vivid reminder of the Frank and Jesse James and Cole Younger days.

His party, consisting of eight people, together with a few others, was placidly bowling along in a coach-and-four when, upon rounding a sharp curve in the roadway, beside Lake Shoshone, they heard a sharp "halt!" and found themselves staring at the rifle barrel of a lone but very determined highwayman.

The startled coachman instantly drew rein and the robber's command was followed by a peremptory "Get down."

When the entire party had disembarked they were ordered to "Shell out," which all proceeded to do.

The bravest in the party was Mrs. Deagan, who threatened to do the robber violence if her children were molested. Further, under the impression that Mr. Deagan had turned over his watch, which is prized intrinsically, she asked the robber to return it, as it was of no value to him.

He politely replied: "If there's anything in this loot I don't want I'll send it to the Yellowstone Hotel. You can go there and identify your property."

This daring hold-up was made easy with the withdrawal of many of the soldiery to Vera Cruz and the Mexican border, leaving the National Reserve inadequately protected.

It was carefully planned, for the robber was recognized as a man who had been travelling with the party for several days and had evidently sized it up as "good picking."

He also had a confederate in the coach, who, like the others, humbly yielded his purse while promptly and earnestly admonishing all to do just as told, as otherwise the desperado would "certainly shoot into the crowd and a number of the ladies be killed."

The experience left most of the older ladies in the party hysterical, though the younger women look upon the adventure rather in the light of a joke. Among these are Vita Deagan and her travelling companion, Florence Wittenberg, who laughingly remarked that they had no money to lose and that, though previously no one cared to hear about the wonders of Yellowstone Park, they now have no trouble finding audiences.

Mr. Deagan refuses to say how much he donated to the highwayman, but remarks that it will take the proceeds of a number of sales of his new unaphones, nabimbas, xylophones, cathedral chimes, orchestra bells and other musical specialties to get even. He tartly suggests that he went West for a change and a rest; that the robber got the change and the hotel men got the rest.

How Great Britain Quashed the German Patents

The following are official notices issued by the British Patent Office in view of the war in Europe:

"By virtue of the provisions of the Patents, Designs and Trade Marks (temporary rules) Act, 1914, the Board of Trade hereby make the following rules:

"1. The Board of Trade may, on the application of any person, and subject to such terms and conditions, if any, as they may think fit, order the avoidance or suspension, in whole or in part, of any patent or license granted to a subject of any state at war with His Majesty, and the Board, before granting any such application, may require to be satisfied on the following heads:

"(a) That the patentee or licensee is the subject of a state at war with His Majesty;

"(b) That the person applying intends to manufacture, or cause to be manufactured, the patented article, or to carry on, or cause to be carried on, the patented process;

"(c) That it is in the general interests of the country or of a section of the community, or of a trade, that such article should be manufactured or such process carried on as aforesaid. * * *

"(1) The Board of Trade may, at any time, in their absolute discretion, revoke any avoidance or suspension of any patent or license ordered by them.

"For the purpose of exercising in any case the powers of avoiding or suspending a patent or license, the Board of Trade may appoint such person or persons as they shall think fit to hold an inquiry.

"Any application to the Board for the avoidance or suspension of any patent or license may be referred for hearing and inquiry to such person or persons who shall report thereon to the Board.

"Provided always that the Board of Trade may at any time, if in their absolute discretion they deem it expedient in the public interest, order the avoidance or suspension in whole or in part of any such patent or license upon such terms and conditions, if any, as they may think fit.

"(2) The comptroller may, at any time during the continuance of these rules, avoid or suspend any proceedings on any application made under the Patents and Designs Act, 1907.

"(3) The comptroller may also at any time during the continuance of these rules, extend the time prescribed by the Patents and Designs Act, 1907, or the Trade Marks Act, 1905, or any rules made thereunder, for doing any act or filing any document, upon such terms and subject to such conditions as he may think fit in the following cases, namely:

"(a) Where it is shown to his satisfaction that the applicant, patentee, or proprietor, as the case may be, was prevented from doing the said act, or filing the said document, by reason of active service or enforced absence from this country, or any other circumstances arising from the present state of war, which, in the opinion of the comptroller, would justify such extension;

"(b) Where the doing of any act would, by reason of the circumstances arising from the present state of war, be prejudicial or injurious to the rights or interests of any applicant.

"(4) The term 'person' used in these rules shall, in addition to the meaning given thereto by Section 19 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, include any Government Department.

"(6) These rules shall come into operation on August, 1914."

LUSTIG MADE DENVER MUTUAL MANAGER

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Denver, Col., Sept. 14.

Harry Lustig, for two years assistant manager of the Mutual Film Corporation offices at Denver, Col., has just been appointed manager, succeeding F. W. Bandy.

Mr. Lustig is one of the best known men in Western film circles and enjoys a marked popularity among the trade. As manager of the many Mutual feature attractions Mr. Lustig is largely responsible for the wide vogue enjoyed by the mutual special attractions.

F. B. Quimby, of Salt Lake City, Utah, is assistant manager.

AMUSEMENT SUPPLY ISSUES NEW CATALOG

The Amusement Supply Company of Chicago has just issued its new catalog. This is one of the most complete catalogs that was ever gotten up in the moving picture supply business.

It embraces all makes of machines, supplies of every kind and a list of repair parts. In the back there are diagrams showing the parts and number of each, for all standard machines. It is one of the handiest catalogs published and might well be in the hands of all motion picture operators and managers.

FILM NEWS FROM FOREIGN PARTS

Few Indoor Motion Picture Houses in Seville—Best Airdomes Charge Only Four Cents Admission—Many People Take in Exhibition Free from Automobiles—Two Exchanges Furnish the City with Releases—Public Demands Good Acting

THE motion picture trade in the Seville consular district has been growing constantly and rapidly, until at present motion picture entertainments are undoubtedly the principal means of public amusement, writes Vice-Consul Harris N. Cookingham, stationed there.

In winter the theatres of Seville are largely devoted to the cinematograph, and in summer practically all the available plazas of the city are let for open-air exhibitions, which attract thousands of spectators of all social classes.

The indoor or winter theatres of Seville are few, inclusive of the opera and vaudeville houses, where motion pictures are shown; hence the sittings are extremely limited and the performances are repeated almost hourly during the evening, from 7:30 to 12:30.

The winter prices range from about four to nineteen cents per seat, according to location. The summer exhibitions, however, under the cloudless evening sky of Seville, offer better opportunities to the public for witnessing the pictures, which are projected on curtains specially erected on the open plazas.

Films Fit Into Seville Life

As all Seville lives out of doors from nine o'clock to midnight during the summer months and seeks quiet amusement in convenient quarters, the motion picture exhibitions fulfill a natural demand.

Seats at the best open-air exhibitions now cost about four cents; but hundreds of people, some in private carriages and motor cars, gather around the inclosure to see the pictures gratis from without. The managers of local coffee and refreshment gardens have in many cases installed motion pictures for the pleasure of their patrons; in these cases there is no charge other than that for the beverage or refreshment ordered, and a customer having paid for his order is entitled to retain his table seat throughout the evening.

Military bands often furnish music at the regular exhibitions, which provide a partially new program every evening, except when the repetition of some extraordinary or very popular film is demanded for three or four nights.

How Films are Obtained

The films used in the local exhibitions are procured almost exclusively from two Seville rental agencies, which also deal in the projecting machines and all other necessary apparatus. As one of the local houses is a branch of Pathé Frères, of Paris, the Pathé machines are most largely used under their various names.

These are practically the only machines in local use. All machines for city entertainments have electrical attachment; those for use in the small towns, where electric current is not available, are furnished with acetylene-gas outfits.

It is estimated that in Seville throughout the summer fifteen to eighteen projecting machines are employed by the several purveyors of amusements. The attendance is not known, but it is evidently enormous.

The films shown at the motion picture entertainments are the Pathé productions under their various names, including the Iberia Brittania films, American Kinema; and the Italian Valeto, Gaumont, Cines, Nordisk, Hepworth, Vitagraph, Éclair, Itala, Celio, Cuesta and Hispano films.

Great actors and actresses are commissioned to take the leading parts. Hence the pictures, besides having artistic merit, have at times a real and permanent histrionic value.

The local preference in picture stories appears to be for those films depicting romance and intrigue; scenic and spectacular; dramatizations of well-known historical and Biblical events are also very popular. World-famous novels, such as "Quo Vadis" and other works which lend themselves to effective staging, are seen here in films of 1,800 to 3,000 meters.

Public Demands Good Acting

The classic and pseudoclassic plays are also favorites with the Sevillian public. This public demands good acting, and at least adequate staging in all films under all conditions. Explanatory notes are made as brief as possible, consistent with the coherence of the plot. Detective stories and tragedies, rather than industrial scenes and foreign processions, appeal to the local spectators.

There are noticeably few films shown here of local or Spanish current events, exclusive of certain bull fights in which well-known matadors take part. Rarely is Seville, in spite of its literary traditions and its reputation for romance, the setting for any photoplay.

There are no motion picture photographers in this city or in this territory; but the Pathé interests send a photographer here on those infrequent occasions when Seville becomes the stage for picture action.

The local picture-theatre managers obtaining their films from the two Seville agencies pay in rental therefor from about one-fifth of one cent per meter to about three cents per meter per day (that is, from six to eighty-seven cents per hundred feet, approximately), according to value and demand.

For new films, which one of the rental agencies purchases from the manufacturers or branches, it pays generally about twenty-six cents per meter; and for used films, two to ten cents per meter, according to condition.

Some Films Obtained from France

Neither the films shown here nor the projecting machines and apparatus in local use are imported into Seville direct by sea; these come from branch houses in other parts of Spain or overland from France.

The customs duty levied on blank films imported into Spain is two pesetas per kilo ($0.175 per pound) net weight; on finished films ready for projection, as well as on the machines and apparatus for projecting, three pesetas per kilo ($0.263 per pound) net weight.

As for American films, both the Seville rental agencies state that these find favor here; the local Pathé agency incorporates them in each program of films let to the exhibitors.

The other agency claims that there is some difficulty in obtaining American pictures, because there is no branch house here other than the practically international Pathé, which does not sell its various films, but, by a clever method of world-wide interchange, is able to let them universally to exhibitors.

The market for American motion-picture machines is, in the present circumstances, inevitably limited, but not negligible, provided these can compete in quality and prices with the French machines now in use here.

American Film Settings Popular

The demand for films of American manufacture rests not so firmly upon the acting protrayed as upon the setting, for American scenery constitutes one of the chief charms of the American films. It is not necessary that the play depict scenes of the Wild West, but preferably it might be staged out of doors.

Good acting is essential and common to all or the great majority of the motion pictures shown here, but the commending distinction of the American pictures must, to Sevillian spectators, always lie in their effective, novel and interesting outdoor setting, either with heroic or with romantic action.

It is probable that the shorter American plays, such as are presented almost nightly at the various picture theatre "revues," will have relatively larger demand than the films of 1,500 meters.

Masterpiece Film Prepares Elaborate Production

The Company Will Bring Out a Realistic Photo Play of Indiana Life in 1831, Founded on "The Hoosier Schoolmaster"

Special to The Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Sept. 14.

GATHERING props for the production of a five-reel picture portraying Indiana life in 1831, the time of "The Hoosier School Master," has proven a great task, but now everything has finally been secured with the exception of a yoke of oxen.

The phone bill for attempts to find the oxen now amounts to more than the actual cost of four or five yoke in the time of the book, and success has crowned the efforts of Marion De La Parelle and Elliott Clawson, of the Masterpiece Film Manufacturing Company, who have charge of the production featuring Max Figman and Lolita Robertson.

The oxen are now in Los Angeles, after a railroad ride of three hundred miles, and to use Mr. Clawson's words, "are eating their heads off."

The production work on this, the first of this company, is progressing very satisfactorily and the picture will be ready for release about October 1.

Following this "The Truth Wagon," from the play by Hayden Talbot, produced in New York with Max Figman and Lolita Robertson, will be taken up. This is the story of an heir buying a metropolitan newspaper which thereafter prints only the truth.

One of the big scenes for "The Hoosier School Master" recently was made, in which Bud Means, the reincarnation of the devil, played by Ray Stewart, caused one hundred and fifty head of horses to stampede down a narrow road with a cliff rising on one side and dropping off more gradually on the other, in order that he prevent the lynching of the school master (Max Figman) by the horse thieves.

Director De La Parelle threatened to whip the man who ran from the road before the horses were within ten feet of him. and gave five dollars to the one making the best leap down the cliff and three dollars to the next best. He is positive he received very satisfactory results.

THISTLE PHOTO PLAY WILL RELEASE WEEKLY COMEDIES

Los Angeles, Sept. 14.

Making three reels of negative weekly for the Charles O. Bowman Popular Photo Plays Corporation, the Thistle Photo Play Company, composed of Bruce Mitchell, Donald MacDonald and Arthur H. Coldewey, are busy at a studio on Washington street near Los Angeles street.

The new organization will make one reel of comedy weekly in which Rena Rogers, Ralph McComas and Allan Fralick will play prominent parts; and two reels of drama with Dorthy Davenport as leading woman, Joseph Singleton, known among photoplayer's circles in Los Angeles as the handsomest man in pictures, and Ed Alexandria.

Messrs. Mitchell and MacDonald are directing the productions and Mr. Coldewey is studio manager. Up to this time two two-reel dramas, "The Lining of the Cloud" and "Chains of Gold," one two-reel comedy, "The Speed Cocktail," and one one-reel comedy, "The Green Eyed Monster," have been completed.

500 NUNS SEE PAGEANT

Special to The Motion Picture News.

St. Louis, Sept. 16.

Nearly 500 nuns attending a convention of teachers at the Christian Brothers College, St. Louis, were recently invited to see the St. Louis pageant and masque pictures at the Juniata Theatre, Juniata street and Grand avenue.

W. J. Flynn, general manager of the Associated Theatres, issued the invitations, and among the audience were many nuns who had never had a chance to witness a motion picture exhibition before. The performance began at one-thirty and lasted until five o'clock in the afternoon.

Buffalo Adds Another to List of Theatres

Ellen Terry, with a Seating Capacity of 1,200 and Elaborately Decorated, First House in City to Have Smoking Balcony

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Buffalo, Sept. 16.

THE new Ellen Terry, at the corner of Grant and Potomac, is nearing completion and will be ready for its patrons in about a week. The theatre will have a seating capacity of 1,200 and will be one of the most up to date in Buffalo.

From a sanitary and fireproof standpoint it will be unequaled. It is equipped with every modern device for ventilation, heating and safety. George P. Kogler will have charge of the music.

The name of the manager has not yet been announced, but John R. Oshei, manager of the Teck Theatre and one of the principal stockholders, is at present arranging that end of the business, and the name of the manager will be announced shortly.

The front of the theatre is built of tapestry brick of a reddish brown color which from a distance of ten or twelve feet looks like velvet and gives a most inviting appearance. The interior decorations are very elaborate.

There will be a smoking balcony and loge boxes. This is the first photoplay house in Buffalo to have a smoking balcony and the innovation is proving popular here. Charles B. Taylor.

Superba and Symphony Open in Los Angeles

Despite the Addition of These Two Theatres, Coast Houses Continue to Pack Crowds In, and Lines at Box-Offices Prevail — Twenty, Fifteen and Ten Cents Are Superba's Prices—Symphony Boasts An Exceptional Operator's Booth

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS
Los Angeles, Sept. 14.

EXCEPTIONAL programs constituted the showing last week at the larger local motion picture theatres, and even with the addition of the Majestic Theatre, with a seating capacity of 1,600, which became a screen show house, Sept. 5, and the opening of the Symphony, with 800 seats, there are not enough seats to accommodate the people who desire to attend, and lines extend from practically every theatre lobby between 7:30 and 8:30 each evening.

One of the most recently opened motion picture theatre palaces in Los Angeles is Quinn's Superba, located on Broadway, about half way between Fifth and Sixth streets.

The owner and manager, J. A. Quinn, is one of the pioneer exhibitors of this city, having successfully conducted motion picture theatres here since the days of the first "store show."

The Superba is a beautiful theatre in every way. The front of the house, finished in the renaissance type of architecture, is in white and cream, and has a massive cornice and frieze, with appropriate theatrical figures modeled therein. More than 6,000 lights are used on the front of the building.

Towering the full length of the three-story building, with a frontage of 70 feet, is a mammoth automatic electric sign, built as high as the city ordinances will permit. On either side of the big "Q" of the sign are unicorns, and every ten seconds each thrusts its fiery tongue at the other and each continuously flaps its wings.

Indirect Lighting Used

In the lobby, foyer, and interior the indirect lighting system is used exclusively. The entrance is finished in marble of contrasting shades, separated by pilasters of Mexican onyx, which are illuminated from within at night. There are numerous massive mirrors.

No detail has been overlooked in the finishing and furnishing of the auditorium, which contains 900 leather upholstered seats. The walls and ceilings are in soft green tones, with trimmings of cream orange and gray.

The sounding cove over the proscenium has a beautiful mural painting. On either side of the proscenium, and slightly above the footlights, are balconies with French windows, adaptable for many singing specialties. The stage has a 30-foot opening and is fully equipped.

The acoustic properties of the house are so perfect a whisper from the stage can be heard in all parts. All draperies and carpets are of a deep red. The theatre is equipped with a ventilating system which insures 30 cubic feet of fresh air for everyone present.

Since the opening, the Superba has been using a program of six reels of General pictures. Music is by a ladies' orchestra of 12 pieces, and each program contains three vocal numbers. The house is divided into three sections, and 10 cents is charged for the seats between the front and the middle of the house, 15 cents for the rear seats, and 20 cents for logies.

Garrick Goes to Features

Quinn's Garrick Theatre, which has been using General and Mutual programs for the past six months, with now and then a multiple reel feature, beginning next Monday will show only features. Contracts were made this week with the local General office for the service.

Another theatre was added to Los Angeles' Film row—Broadway—with the opening of the Symphony Theatre, just below Sixth street.

The building for this theatre was remodeled and the house furnished at a cost of approximately $40,000, and Messrs. Joseph Rittigstein and Thomas DuMois, the owners, have a place of amusement very creditable to this city.

The entire front of the building was remodeled. Above is a mammoth automatic electric sign, and over the front of the theatre are thousands of lights.

The lobby is finished with marble, stained glass and mural paintings. Throughout the concealed lighting system is used. The theatre has seven hundred seats, is fitted with elegantly furnished rest rooms, and has a very efficient ventilating system. Other features are in evidence throughout the theatre.

Particular attention was paid to the construction of the operating room, which is large and roomy. This is fitted with two Powers' 6A projecting machines, spot lights, stereopticons and all necessary devices for all effects. In one section is a large, roomy work-bench, with all tools necessary. In the ceiling is an exceptionally large ventilator.

A Novel Lobby Display

The new theatre will be managed by S. L. Bosley, who served as manager for Clune theatres for several years.

Manager Hawkins, of the Alhambra Theatre, recently had the Lasky picture, "The Call of the North," featuring Robert Edeson.

In this one of the scenes shows one of the Factor's hunters caught in a bear trap, and the publicity man of the theatre, Harry Nogle, saw a good opportunity to attract attention to the lobby display by securing the trap at the Lasky studio in Hollywood and displaying it in the lobby, together with a big, still photograph of the scene.

The springs on both ends of the trap are so strong that a heavy man cannot press one together by standing or jumping upon it. The manufacturers of the trap furnish a screw clamp to be used in opening the trap. J. C. JESSEN.

Famous Players Starts Infringement Campaign

Seeks to Enjoin Numerous Companies Claimed to Have Used Plots and Titles Whose Film Copyrights Are Owned by Restraining Companies

THE Famous Players Film Company has been granted an injunction on all further exhibitions of the play "Aftermath" by Judge Dever, of the Superior Court of Illinois. The Famous Players claims that this is an infringement of its title "Aftermath," the play written by Prof. William Addison Harvey, of Columbia University, and recently released by the Famous Players.

The Famous Players has also succeeded in causing the Apex Film Company to abandon the name of "Saints and Sinners," a title scheduled for forthcoming releases. The film rights of the play "Saints and Sinners," written by Sir Henry Arthur Jones, are controlled by the Famous Players Film Company.

It is said that similar action is also being taken against the Lubin Company for its release of "A Fatal Card," which the Famous Players contend is an infringement on the title of "The Fatal Card," the Charles Frohman play, controlled by them, and also "The Better Man," the title of the Cyrus Townsend Brady story which the Famous Players Company recently filmed; against the Kalem Company for its filming "The Brand," which, it is claimed, was also borrowed from the plot of "The Crucible," and against the World Film Company for its release of "Jess of the Mountain Country," said to be based on the Famous Players' recent production, "Tess of the Storm Country."

But as there is a big demand here for pictures, would not the maintenance of an exchange be profitable?

The indifference of Americans to the possibilities of export trade to South and Central America is exemplified in the lack of courtesy shown on many occasions when my letters were not answered.

In striking contrast is the attitude of European manufacturers. When I write to the advertisers in the Bioscope of London and Le Courrier of Paris, I get proposals in almost every mail. These people act as if they are anxious to do business.

OF course, American films are not absolutely unknown here. We accasionally see pictures of Selig, Comic, Broncho, American Kino, Thanhouser and others through the rental office of Pathé Freres.

The Universal, Edison, American, Famous Players, Lasky, Essanay, Bosworth, Warners, and the Horsely films would take well down here; indeed, in all Latin-American countries. It is only a matter of translating the titles into Spanish and having a good rental representative in this locality. A territorial concession for Central America and Panama in San Jose would prove a money-maker.

The admission prices charged in this country may be of interest to the exhibitors in the United States. Orchestra chairs cost fifty centimos, the equivalent of twenty-five cents gold, for three reels. Outside of the capital the admission is about twenty-five cents gold per five hundred feet shown, divided into two parts. Box seats get fifteen cents gold extra. Special features bring not less than a dollar gold.

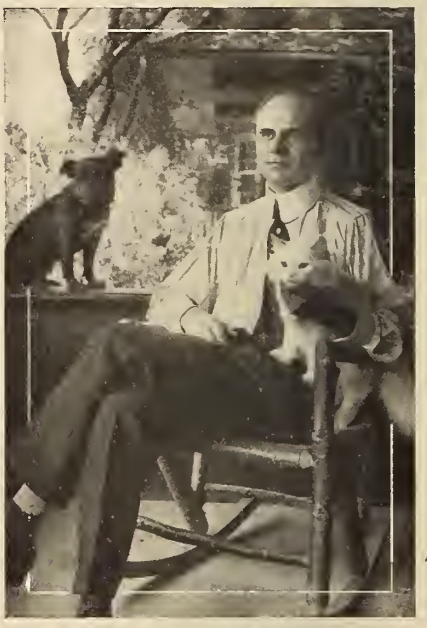
The feature film is becoming immensely popular. They are advertised extensively in the newspapers.

REGULAR performances begin at eight in the evening and on festival days matinees commence at 2 p. m. The theatres are closed on Monday.

School children are admitted free on week days from one to three o'clock. This proves to be a good drawing card, for they talk about the pictures at home, thereby arousing the interest of the adults, who, it is figured by the managers, come later through this means.

We are not pestered with censorship here, as you are in some parts of the States; and we are thankful. The government assumes that managers are fully capable of discriminating.

THE rental price of a six-reel program is about five dollars gold, and the special films are rented on a percentage basis by the night.



There are but two motion picture camera owners (one of them myself), who occasionally take pictures of special events, and we furnish the negatives to the theatres on a percentage.

THE ENEMY'S FLEET APPROACHING
(Scene from "England's Menace"—Cosmofotofilm Feature)

APFEL AT WORK ON "WHERE THE TRAIL DIVIDES"

Oscar Apfel, who next month will celebrate his first year as director with the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, will at the same time celebrate the securing of patent rights on a new "baby" spotlight which he recently applied for and which has been tried out by both Apfel and Cecil B. De Mille on the various Lasky productions and found to fill a long felt want.

OSCAR APFEL

Mr. Apfel and Cecil B. De Mille worked together on Lasky's "The Squaw Man" and "Brewster's Millions," but since the demand for Lasky productions increased so that the firm arranged to produce two plays a month instead of one Mr. Apfel was set to work on "The Only Son" with De Mille doing "The Man on the Box."

Apfel is now working on "Where the Trail Divides," with Robert Edeson, and at the completion of this feature will begin work on one of the Belasco plays.

Apfel is signed for three years with Lasky and everything points to an even longer engagement for all connected with that concern are deeply appreciative of his excellent work.

OPEN PITTSBURGH EXCHANGE

The Noted Plays Feature Company of New York has located an office in Pittsburgh at Fourth avenue and Ferry street. Adolph Klein and H. Clay Berger are managers. They state that they will release one feature a week. The company has also put in fifty reels of singles, all comedies and dramas, most of which are new and in demand at this time.

"THE MYSTERY OF THE GLASS TUBES"

Edison—One Reel)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

WHAT better conclusion, even if somewhat hackneyed, could be desired for the "Chronicles of Cleek" than that he should win the hand of the girl that had twice saved his life! As he recovers himself after a harrowing half-hour in a leaking vessel—and it is indeed a narrow escape that he has, for the water is already slowly rising over his head when Miss Lorne rushes in with the rescuing party—he asks her with his first breath if she will be his wife, and she holds out her hand for the ring. And although the cocaine smugglers whom he was trying to capture have baffled him this time, surely they cannot get away from him the next time, when he has the constant aid of this spirited and brave girl.

CLEEK IS RESCUED FROM THE SINKING SHIP.

But the eleventh episode of Thomas W. Hanshew's "Chronicles of Cleek" is chock-full of mystery and suspended interest and thrilling incidents before we come to this happy and joyful end.

Cleek proves himself as daring and intrepid as ever and gets a line on the cocaine smugglers by holding up one of the gang and going disguised as this man to the den.

But unfortunately this fellow gets away and then the tables are turned on Cleek, and it seems pretty serious business for him until Ailea Lorne learns the state of affairs and gets him out of his predicament. We get no hint of this outcome as the story is unfolded, but are kept entirely in the dark, the true and proper way for a mystery story to be handled.

Ben Wilson gives the same inimitable presentation of the great amateur detective, making us realize fully his fearlessness, his shrewdness, under the nonchalant air that he assumes. Miss Gertrude McCoy as Ailea Lorne breaks this impenetrable veil of calmness, and has Mr. Cleek on his knees at her feet, which was just as it should be.

"DR. FENTON'S ORDEAL"

(Hepworth—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

THE Hepworth Stock Company is a finely balanced group of players, and in whatever vehicle the members are appearing, their delineations show careful study and long training.

The latest release shows clearly that this praise is just praise. In "Dr. Fenton's Ordeal," Stewart Rome has the leading part, the young medical student, who through gambling falls into bad ways, but regains control of himself and becomes a world famous specialist.

Just this in itself would not give this polished actor a chance to display his fine powers. But when he is brought face to face with this situation—to open the eyes of the man he robbed and be recognized as a thief or to let him remain blind and retain his own good name especially in the eyes of the man's sister whom he now loves—he has every chance to show his mettle. The full command which Mr. Rome has over his facial expression, the calmness and the dignity with which he moves, and the repression that prevents melodramatic display of conflicting and bursting feelings, are unmistakable and entitled Mr. Rome to a high rank among motion picture actors.

With such a fine piece of work by Mr. Rome it might be thought that the rest of the cast was entirely overshadowed. This is not true. The other parts are well taken and in no sense does Mr. Rome gain by contrast. Tom Powers and Henry Vibart are capable actors and give more than satisfactory portrayals. Chrissie White, in the part of the sister, adds new laurels to an already long list.

"TWINS AND TROUBLE"

(Edison—One Reel)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

THAT twins are not always an unadulterated blessing to fond parents, can be gathered from the title of this comedy, written by J. Edward Hungerford and performed by Edison players under the direction of Charles M. Seay.

The trouble started as soon as the twins arrived, not between the proud father and mother over which one was the prettiest child, or which resembled which parent the most, but between the grandfathers, each of whom desired and really demanded sole proprietorship in the twins as far as the other grandfather was concerned.

The upshot of the whole matter is that when our comedy opens, the grandfathers have become so incensed with each other that they have carried the twins off bodily, one for each couple.

It was a lucky thing after all that there were twins because with such irascible and jealous persons as the Major and the Colonel, there is no telling what might have happened to one poor little innocent baby.

But this is just the beginning of the fun. The Colonel and the Major are not satisfied with one grandchild apiece, but each wants all that there are, in this case just two. Being seasoned old warriors, their way is by main force, and they almost come to blows on the street when they meet. This disorderliness gets them in trouble with the police, while the servant girls are losing the babies.

The reunion of all—twins, grandparents and parents—takes place in the station house, the distracted mother and father get back their little darlings, and the old folks have by this time commenced to see the folly of their ways, and the light breaks in upon them that undivided possession of the twins is impossible—that they all can share them alike.

"THE TREY O' HEARTS"

(Gold Seal-Universal—Eighth Chapter)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"MOCK ROSE" is the title of this chapter, and one may glean from it that some sort of an impersonation takes place. The situation is, indeed, a complicated one. Judith assumes the part of Rose, and then Rose poses as Judith, and then, too, both the characters are impersonated by Cleo Madison.

The parts have been none too easy for her to play up to date, but now it seems as if her abilities must have been taxed to their utmost extent. To play the parts of two sisters differing entirely in character as much as a sheep does from a wolf, and then to have each one impersonate the other, each really retaining her own character but appearing to act as the other would act, must have presented great difficulties. That the picture is just as easy to follow even though this double impersonation does take place is materially due to Miss Madison.

It has not been mentioned that each instalment of "The Trey o' Hearts" carries a complete synopsis of the preceding chapters which is shown before the separate episode commences. In most stories of a serial nature this has been neglected, and one fails to comprehend what all the action is about, but here it is fully explained to the spectators.

There are, no doubt, many who will be glad of the chance to catch a glimpse of Wilfred Lucas, the director of the pictures as he appears in this chapter. He poses as a minister, and is just about to marry Judith and Alan, when Marrophat rushes in and makes known to Law that he is about to marry the wrong woman.

Marrophat then enlists the aid of the gunman again, and he and his associates kidnap Rose and imprison her in a secluded house. A fire breaks out, and Alan arrives on the scene just in time to rescue Rose by swinging to her window at the end of a rope from the next house, thus he again displays his remarkable acrobatic ability.

Another most realistic fight is the cause of the fire. Wilfred Lucas and Francis Ford seem to vie with one another to see who can put on the best general scrap, and up to date the honors seem to be about even.

This instalment is alive with action of the swiftest sort from the beginning to the end; one hardly has a chance to recover from one thrill before another and greater one is shown.

"Action" seems to be the cry of the director, and he has certainly obtained it. Bruises and broken bones may be the consequences, but it matters little as long as it is obtained.

This instalment will not only maintain the reputation of the series, but will excite an interest in the parts to follow.

OPPOSE TAX ON MOTION PICTURES

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Louisville, Ky., Sept. 16.

THE proposal to place a special revenue tax upon theatre tickets is meeting with the disapproval of practically every one in Louisville, where the five-cent and ten-cent motion picture theatres are the principal sources of amusement of a large part of the population.

Kentucky representatives in Congress and the Senate will be urged to use their influence to keep the theatre tickets out of the Government's scheme of revenue raising.

"MOTHER"

(World Film—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

WIDELY differing from its last release, "The Dollar Mark" comes this, the latest picture of the World Film Corporation. It is as different from the other as night is from day. It is a story of an entirely different nature, of a sort that one seldom is fortunate in seeing on the screen, portraying what some are wont to call the greatest existing love, that of a mother's affection for her children.

It matters little to her whether they deserve it or not, whether they are good or bad, and it even seems as if she loved the scapegraces better than her more docile daughters, so profuse and warm is her welcome on their return, a parallel to the return of the prodigal in the Bible.

Emma Dunn as Mother carries the leading part, the same which she created on the stage several years ago in Jules Eckart Goodman's play of the same name. It is her first appearance in motion pictures. She is supported by a capable cast, consisting of Mr. Baker as her oldest son, and Belle Adair as his sweetheart, who is also, merely an adventuress. Mr. Desforges is the second son, and Jane Corcoran, the woman whom he becomes enamoured by. The daughters are played by Lillian Cook and Priscilla Dean.

The action is not fast and nothing of the sensational order appears at all, but the story needs not this kind of support to carry it through. It is absorbing from start to finish, simply because of its heart interest plot, which does not once allow the attention to falter.

THE RETURN OF THE PRODIGAL

At the beginning of the story, the older son is wasting his money on an adventuress. He finally marries her, and in his endeavor to obtain more money he forges his mother's name on a draft.

But she, to save her son from jail, says that it is her own signature. He finally realizes the worthlessness of his wife and leaves her and then devotes his attentions to saving his younger brother from a similar life. He is successful, and all ends happily.

"WHEN HONOR CALLS"

(Eclectic—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

THE Germans under the leadership of Max Reinhardt have been surpassing the rest of the world in the beauty and fitness of their stage productions, and it begins to appear that they are working toward the same end in their picture plays.

Their work has originality and freshness, qualities that are probably more difficult of achievement than any others. Great emphasis is laid upon acting, but almost equal emphasis is put upon stage settings.

These must give above all else the right atmosphere. No matter how carefully and exact the sets and the properties may be, if the whole impression that the spectator gets does not accentuate the mood, the production is faulty.

The impression that is made upon the mind of the spectator is the goal sought, and there must be no incongruity of staging or of acting.

Take the latest picture of the Eclectic Film Company. At the first glance one would guess, and guess rightly, that it was made in the Berlin studio. There is complete unity of action and entire harmony of staging. No superfluous scenes are allowed, the only excuse for which might be touches of characterization or sidelights upon the beauty of the spectacle.

Everything must bear directly upon the main action or movement of the story. The successful attainment of this end is due to the fact that the scenario is written by a skilled and experienced literary craftsman, a man who is no novice at the work.

His name is Richard Voss and he has a number of plays to his credit. His handiwork is evident in the sub-titles, which are not merely explanatory, but have literary value in the sidelights which they throw upon the characters. He has seen fit to keep nearly all of the sub-titles in dialogue, with an immense gain in the unity and coherence of the play.

After so much is said of the construction and the staging of the play, there is little room left to speak of the acting.

EVA'S HUSBAND FORGIVES HER

But a great deal ought to be said. It is finished, the result of long and serious study.

The sooner some people learn that the art of the actor is something that cannot be learned in a day the better off our American productions will be. It is along a hard road, and takes infinite and painstaking study.

The acting of each one of the principals has intensity, but it has that restraint which is the real test of an actor's ability.

HUTCHINSON A MONTH IN WAR ZONE

AN exciting trip from Berne, Switzerland, through France to London with S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Manufacturing Company, his wife and two sons, Hobart and Winston, as the principal leads, would make a thrilling motion picture.

The party was accompanied by a number of unfortunate tourists, but, after many trying visitations, they reached London. Mr. Hutchinson is expected to reach the States the latter part of the month.

"KIT, THE ARKANSAW TRAVELER"

(General Film—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

FOR those who love adventurous excitement and stirring action, a new country offers their hearts' desire, and a picture laid in a newly settled section where unruliness and lawlessness always precede order and tranquillity is the best substitute and the greatest solace, for the multitude of human beings who yearn for the freedom of the wild and yet are condemned to ply their daily trade in the humdrum of city existence.

A picture of this sort is the three-part Kalem drama, founded on the play made famous by the late F. S. Chanfrau. It was produced under the direction of Kenean Buel, and this assures great care and attention to every detail.

Life on the Mississippi in the early days of Arkansas, the life that has become memorable in the pages of Mark Twain and Thomas Bailey Aldrich, is revivified as the tense scenes pass before us.

The cast is a notable one, including many of the best known players in the Kalem ranks. Jere Austin Kit Redding, "the Arkansaw Traveler." In every action and in every expression he is a fine exponent of the self-reliant, courageous settler. Alice Hollister is cast for the part of Kit's wife. While she is not given abundant opportunity to demonstrate her histrionic skill in the short time that she appears before she is drowned in her forced flight with the gambler, she gives ample evidence of that ability she has proven on many occasions.

The gambler, Manuel Bond, who is the evil spirit in the life of Kit Redding, is impersonated with a full appreciation of the demands of the character by Benjamin Ross. Dainty and pretty Marguerite Courtot puts all the charms and freshness of her girlish personality into her characterization of Kit's daughter, Alice, who is stolen away from him by Manuel Bond, and grows to womanhood while the father longs for her in heart-aching loneliness.

Other players who aid in making this a well-rounded and balanced picture are little Doris Hollister as Alice before she is stolen away; Leo Hussa as Washington Stubs, Ben Walker as Judge Snuggs, and Sam Stillwell as Major Squiggs, amusing examples of the lazy hangers-on along the river front in the early days; Arthur Albertson as manly James Temple who falls head over heels in love with Alice the first time he sees her; and Mary Taylor Roos as James' sweet-faced and kindly old mother.

"RICHELIEU"

(101 Bison—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

IT was inevitable that sooner or later Cardinal Richelieu should appear in pictures. The crafty churchman had already been the central figure of novels and plays, and it was just a matter of time when some enterprising producer would reveal on the screen the greatness of the one-time steersman of France's fortunes. Allan Dwan is the director who undertook the task, and with the players and the resources of the 101 Bison company at his disposal, there was every prospect of his success. Therefore it is hardly necessary to say that he has succeeded in really reproducing a section from the most momentous and troublous times in the history of France, when the strong will and the keen intellect of the great cardinal was all that saved her from the foes that harassed her inside and out.

JULIE AND THE DYING RICHELIEU

Murdock MacQuarrie has been assigned the part of the masterful and wise, but at the same time crafty and unscrupulous prelate. The Cardinal is an old man, feeble and tottering, when the play opens, for it is in the last years of his dominance, the time of the Lanquedoc Revolt. Mr. MacQuarrie's portrayal of Richelieu is really a fine piece of acting; he is aged and decrepit, but he has the bright, twinkling eyes, the sharply chiseled mouth and chin, the delicate, aristocratic nose that are never missing in any likeness of the Cardinal that has been handed down to us. At times perhaps, Mr. MacQuarrie, in his eagerness to give the impression of the man's craftiness, lays too much emphasis on the scheming side of his nature. But the Cardinal was far from being a low scheming politician, and whatever he plotted or put into action he lifted and made seem dignified and statesmanlike.

In the supporting cast are the well-known players, Pauline Bush, as Julie de Mortemar, the Cardinal's ward, to whom he was sincerely devoted; Edith Chapman, as the handsome, unselfish queen; William C. Dwolan, as Adrian de Mauprat, Julie's lover; Lon Chaney as Barabas, the wicked conspirator, also in love with Julie, whose treachery with Spain was at length discovered; Robert Chandler as the toppish and dandified Sieur de Berington; and James Neil as the weak-willed and feeble-minded king.

"ODYSSEY OF THE NORTH"

(Bosworth—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

HOBART BOSWORTH, the director and principal character of this picture taken from Jack London's story, must have found it a hard task to develop it, as it relies solely on character portrayal for much of its success.

It has no big scene and no very startling situations are introduced until the end.

And those who enjoy a picture of this variety will most certainly appreciate the "Odyssey of the North," as it will fall in just that class. There are many who do like such pictures, so it may well be concluded that this latest release of Bosworth's will meet with success.

There are many redeeming features to be enumerated, and perhaps the most notable of these is the excellent scenes. Some pictures that profess to lay before the spectator actual scenes of the frozen north fail to come up to expectations, as one only sees about a foot of snow lying on the ground, as much as we could see in some of the larger city parks and anywhere in the country, but it is not so in this picture. The ground is covered with several feet of frozen snow, which lends a distinctly northern atmosphere to the whole production.

Very few interiors are shown, most all of the action transpiring in the open. Those few that do appear, are very realistic, so with all these points considered, the film may well be called perfect, regarded technically.

Naass, the central figure of the tale, is possessed with an exceptionally peculiar character. At times he may be pitied and then again condemned. Throughout the picture he is continually in pursuit of the man who stole away his wife, and in his long searches, wanderings and the misfortunes that befall him, one's heart warms out to him.

But then when he at last finds his wife who has grown to love her new husband, and when he leaves them alone to perish from starvation and cold in the frozen north, not much sympathy is extended to him.

Rhea Haines plays the part of Unga, the woman who Naass loves with all his savage heart, and Gordon Shekville appears as Axel Bunderson, the man who stole her from him and who succeeded in making her love him. A number of others appear in the cast, but they play small parts, as in most of the scenes these three are the only ones that take part.

The sub-titles are all in the first person, as the story is told by Naass to two of his friends. He is the last of a family of hardy northern sailors, who has been brought up with a tribe of Alaskan Indians, of which Unga is the last. It is a very pretty story, and perhaps a little too long to call excellent. The many endeavors of Naass to find the other two constitute the most part of the film.

He travels for many miles and is at one time made a prisoner in the Siberian salt mines, where he receives many a cruel beating, but his search is rewarded, and his chance for revenge comes, which he unhesitatingly grasps. Whether or not his action is justified must be determined by seeing the picture.

SHORTEST AIRDOME SEASON IN ALBANY

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Albany, Sept. 17.

ALBANY'S airdomes came to an abrupt closing last week owing to the drop in the thermometer.

At first it was believed that the shut-down would only be temporary, but as the evenings continued cold it was decided to remain closed. This was the shortest season the open air show places have had since the institution of pictures in Albany.

SPECIAL FILM REVIEWS

"The Blue Coyote Cherry Crop." (Edison, Tuesday, Sept. 22.)—In spite of its somewhat puzzling title, this is a very pleasing little drama of the mine that does not pay and the girl who receives the dividends. Her name is Cherry, hence the sums of gold dust that the men send East to her are called the "Cherry Crop."

For it must be known that her father died and all he left his daughter was his claim in the mine. But this does not turn out to be a very valuable mine, and the income sent to Cherry is increased by Jack, a young miner, and his partners out of their own pockets. They come to the end of their resources, and then Cherry comes West with her lawyer to investigate. Jack holds his lips tight, but when the secret is revealed, gratitude turns to love and that is the end of it.

"Our Land of Gold." (Powers. Friday, Sept. 25.)—A picture made by the Universal Company in co-operation with the municipal authorities of Los Angeles, depicting the somewhat exaggerated results that might happen, due to an argument concerning the war. Two men come to blows in arguing the question, and a number of others take sides and a great rough-house ensues, as realistic as all those that Francis Ford has his hand in.

A tailor leaves his iron on a coat and rushes out to join the struggle, with the result that a fire takes place; the combatants are all arrested.

Moral: Don't argue about the European situation.

"The Aztec Treasure." (Eclair-Universal. Two reels. Wednesday, September 23.)—An absorbing drama featuring Bob Frazer, Edna Payne, Fred Hearn and Hal Wilson. A young American adventurer is the means of freeing the Mexicans from the tyrannical rule of their governor, and he wins a pretty girl in the bargain. This picture is full of action of the most exciting sort.

It gives the spectator vived pictures of life in the turbulent republic below the border. The lighting effects make the picture unusually attractive.

"Grand Opera in Rubeville." (Edison. Two reels. Friday, Sept. 25.—In broadly burlesquing the weakness that women have for musicians, real and sham, Ashley Miller has hit upon a truly comic idea. And when he embodies in his play an amateur performance of grand opera gotten up by the faker from Boston, the fun becomes uproarious.

All of which goes to show that music is a great art when sure-enough artists are interpreting it, but can be made a big joke and a farce when the music-makers don't understand what they are trying to do.

"The Final Verdict." (Majestic. Two reels. Sunday, Sept. 13.).—By the simple expedient of having a man shoot another in a saloon and make his getaway, reserving the reason for this apparently cold-blooded murder until the very last, the producer has made this a novel picture of Western life, a thing that seems extremely difficult to achieve.

When the man is at length captured by the sheriff, he tells the story of how his partner robbed him and his wife of everything, even of water, and thus was responsible for his wife's death. This was the man that he shot. The sheriff let him loose.

"Gold." (Thanhouser. Two parts. Tuesday, Sept. 15.)—A silly and impracticable artifice for firing a gun in the very last scene of this picture almost spoils it. A miner takes his money from the bank and hides it in his home. A desperado follows him and when the miner is away steals into the house and tries to find the gold.

Unsuccessful, he attempts to force the granddaughter to give up the secret by placing the gun before him, ready to go off when a candle burns a string and releases the trigger. Just how this will work is unfathomable. But it works so well that the robber is killed when he foolishly sticks his head in the way, and the girl is pulled out of the line of fire by rescuers.

"Merely Mother." (Biograph. Two reels. Tuesday, Sept. 15.)—A typical Biograph drama made in the Biograph manner. It is rich in sentiment and will make a distinct impression upon the great mass of motion picture devotees. The story with plenty of heart interest never becomes maudlin. A girl has been put through school by the unselfish efforts of her mother and when she marries a wealthy man, she ignores her poor mother altogether. When the husband realizes that his wife is neglecting their child for the sake of pleasure, he grieved, but when he sees the heartless way in which she treats her mother, he is driven to the point of desperation.

UNIT ORCHESTRA BUILDER A SUICIDE

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Rochester, Sept. 16.

A stringent police investigation is being conducted here today into the circumstances attending the suicide of Robert-Hope-Jones, seventy-three, of No. 700 Elmwood avenue, Buffalo, and known the world over as the inventor of the Unit Orchestra.

Mr. Hope-Jones ended his life with gas in a rooming-house at No. 10 George street. A letter found on the body indicated he was in legal trouble.

Hope-Jones was originally an electrician in England, and after he came to the United States he perfected an ingenious scheme, applying his electrical apparatus to the keyboard of an organ.

UNIVERSAL WAR FILMS SHOWN

The Universal's "Visualized Newspaper," "The Animated Weekly" No. 131, released September 9, has the distinction of showing some of the first authentic pictures of the great European War that have been shown on this side of the Atlantic. The scenes show the captive wounded Germans in Brussels; the brave defenders of Liege, and the Belgium Civil Guards going to the front.

The films were brought out of Belgium at great risk, and carried across the Atlantic in the personal baggage of Mrs. J. C. Graham, wife of the general manager of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

Centaur Plant Opens Second Addition

Buildings of the Company Now Occupy a Solid Acre—Activity in Shipping Room Refutes "Hard Times" Talk

IN opening the new wing of the Centaur Film Company building at Bayonne, N. J., last Wednesday, David Horsley becomes the head of one of the largest commercial motion picture plants in America.

The Centaur buildings now cover a solid acre of ground, and are of the most modern and improved type, equipped throughout with new machinery. A trip through their labyrinthine windings amounts to almost a journey and discloses twenty-one departments and an equipment that lacks no single device, little or big, that might be required for absolute completeness.

There are, in fact, several new devices and improvements on older machine patents which were invented by Mr. Horsley.

The new carpenter shop, which is in charge of Jim Horsley, is capable of turning out any kind of a prop that can be made of wood or papier mache.

The tinting department, with the old and new rooms combined, modeled after a famous German laboratory, are most capacious, and some remarkable tone effects are now being obtained.

The perforation department has been doubled in size and re-equipped. It will handle vast quantities of film of any manufacture.

CENTAUR FILM COMPANY'S PLANT AT BAYONNE, N. J., WITH VIEWS OF THE CARPENTER SHOP AND THE SHIPPING ROOM.

Harry Horsley is superintendent of the laboratories and positive assembling departments, the last of which, with the new addition just put in operation, engages the constant services of sixty-one employes.

The shipping room now occupies new quarters and is one of the busiest in the plant—an excellent refutation of the "hard time" talk which has been heard so much since the war broke out in Europe.

The "old" part of the Centaur plant—which indeed is less than a year old—includes a colossal glass studio, equipped with a Cooper-Hewitt lighting system, so that seven directors are able to work at one time, night or day.

Alco Establishes Ten New Exchanges

Company Expects to Add Four to the List in a Short Period—Lichtman Finds Western Business Conditions Excellent

AL. LICHTMAN, vice-president and general manager of the Alco Film Corporation, reports from the West the establishment of several central State points and is hastening to complete the arrangements on the coast.

Mr. Brown, for the company, has been operating in the southern States.

A telegram received at the Alco offices from their vice-president expresses the enthusiasm and interest that is being met with in the establishment of branches. The depressing influence that the disturbance of Europe has occasioned in so many industries does not seem to have affected the Middle States.

The Alco Company has established exchanges in the following cities: Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Pittsburgh, Chicago, Minneapolis, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Indianapolis and New York.

Branches at the following points will soon be established: Portland, Ore.; San Francisco, Denver, Vancouver and Montreal.

The Philadelphia branch will be operated and controlled by the parent company. This territory will include eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey.

The first release of the Alco program will be made in October 5, and everything is in readiness to present for the first time Miss Ethel Barrymore in "The Nightingale," which will be followed by Andrew Mack in "The Ragged Earl," and at the private showing of these pictures at the Alco offices during the past week, the general expression of opinion was given that these productions will furnish a pleasing surprise to the public and emphasize the claims made by the organization that the character and class of their photoplays will be acknowledged as among the highest standard of the art.

The company has been fortunate in securing for release the film productions of well-known dramas, which played to two-dollar Broadway houses throughout the legitimate seasons in the metropolis.

The plays represent a wide variety of subjects, each interpreted by stars peculiarly fitted for the roles. The players are supported by casts of unusual ability.

BEN WILSON APPEARS IN IMP PLAY

The first play to be directed and played by Ben Wilson, recent acquisition of the Imp Company, is the "Great Hotel Mystery," a detective play in two reels. Mr. Wilson has already acquired considerable fame in detective roles, having created Cleek, of the "Cleek Detective Series," produced by the Edison Company.

Mr. Wilson's company, under the managership of Julius Stern, is at present producing at the Victor Studio, Eleventh avenue and Forty-third street, New York City, formerly occupied by the Florence Lawrence Company.

In and Out of Los Angeles Studios

Special to Motion Picture News.
Los Angeles, Sept. 14.

HOW a wealthy father, who demanded that his prospective son-in-law should have at least $5,000 before he would consent to the marriage of his daughter, furnishes the cash to the young man by buying a vacant lot adjacent to his mansion at a big price in order to keep out undesirable neighbors, is shown in a one-reel Joker-Universal comedy produced by Harry Edwards and a cast composed of: Ray Galleger, William Gettinger, Evelyn Thatcher, Bobbie Feuhrer, Harry Moodie and Fred Hornby.

Sam De Grasse, heavy of the Jack Adolfi Reliance Company, was the man of the hour a few days ago, when "The Tardy Cannon Ball" was produced. It is from the story by George Pattullo. It was delayed because Eugene Pallette became the victim of a toothache when the players were fifteen miles from a dentist.

Mr. De Grasse found a pair of pincers in the tool-box of the automobile and took out the molar at the first attempt. He then confessed he had practiced dentistry for several years before becoming an actor.

Director Fred Kelsey is this week producing "The Revenue Officer's Deputy," in two reels, for the Reliance Mutual release, which will portray the work of federal officers. The scenario is by F. McGrew Willis, and W. E. Lowery, Frank Bennett, W. H. Long and Irene Hunt are the principals of the cast.

Play of Parental Love

Frank E. Woods has written the scenario for a Western melodrama, to be produced by Sheriff Arthur Mackley, "The Badge of Office." Of course, being produced by Mr. Mackley, the photoplay must have a sheriff, and the director is the officer of the frontier district.

Associating with rough men in order that he keep them within the bounds of the law, the sheriff degenerates into a drunkard and becomes the object of scorn in the entire town, after losing his office. Through love for his boy he finally masters the habit, and later recovers his office by capturing an outlaw who defied all of the community.

Through the courtesy of Manager Lorenz, of the Venice baseball coast league team, Al. Curtis and his band of Joker comedy makers was able to film a real baseball comedy.

Many of the scenes were taken in the grandstands and some of the exciting plays of the game will be shown. The picture will be released under the title of "The Baseball Fans of Fanville."

This snapshot shows pretty Stella Razeto of the Selig Company in the first crinoline dress she ever wore on or off either the screen or the stage. She has received so many compliments from her admirers that she is contemplating trying to revive this old costume.

Insley Produces "Love and Surgery"

Charles Insley, who has been with the Keystone makers, has been secured by the manager of the LKO brand, and is now directing one of the comedy companies. The new Universal brand will be released in the near future, the first being "Love and Surgery," a two-reel laugh-maker by Henry Pathe Lehrmann.

Herbert Rawlinson, the athletic leading man of the Universal special feature company, sprung a number of new stunts on Director Frank Lloyd in the production of "The Vagabond," a two-reel trick photography drama.

In this Mr. Rawlinson plays the parts of a vagabond and a never-do-well young fellow who goes to a small mountain town in the hope of benefiting his health. In order that he could better impersonate the character of a present-day hobo, Mr. Rawlinson spent several evenings at East First street cafes and saloons.

Anna Little, of the Universal special feature company, was recently unable to go to the studio owing to illness and parts cast for her were taken by Beatrice Van.

Popular Davis Story on the Screen

The Favorite Players company, working at the Norbig studio on Allesandra street, recently began the production of "The Man Who Could Not Lose," from the story of the same title by Richard Harding Davis. Carlyle Blackwell will play the title role.

Ed. Sloman, playing the role of Senaca Trine in the Universal serial, "The Trey o' Hearts," has received letters from relatives in London, concerning war conditions there, and would now be on his way to answer the call to the colors, if another could be secured to take his place in the remaining series of the serial.

Throughout eighteen reels of the pictures now completed Sloman has impersonated a paralyzed man who had the use of one hand and arm and his head, and so far—according to the photographic record—he has not forgotten and moved another part of his body.

"The Measure of a Man" is a two-reel picture produced by Joseph De Grasse for the Rex brand Universal, from the scenario by Thomas Forman. The principal parts are taken by William Dowlin, Pauline Bush, Lon Chaney and Mr. De Grasse. The story is laid in the Northwest, and has to do with the mounted police. One series of scenes introduces the workings of the vigilance committee.

Cowboy Horseplay in Funny Comedy

The formation of an impromptu matrimonial agency by a gang of cowboys, who compel a bogus count, played by Baldy Belmont, to marry an independent cook, brings about a number of novel situations for the Majestic comedy, "Back to the Kitchen," in which Dorothy Gish is featured. This is now being produced by Jack O'Brien at the Majestic studio.

Tapping a wire and bringing about the financial ruin of a broker, is one of the features of a two-reel heart interest Majestic drama. "Paid With Interest," produced by Donald Crisp. Mae Marsh and Robert Harron play prominent parts in this picture, from a scenario by Russell E. Smith.

Director David Kirkland, of the Ford Sterling Producing Company, after completing a two-reel picture, "At the Shoot," in which the German comedian wins a bride by the highest score, recently left for a vacation of a week or two in San Francisco. In his absence Ford Sterling directed as well as played leads.

Universal photo players' photographs displayed in the window of the Sun Drug Store, at the corner of Fifth and Broadway, recently, caused the need of a traffic officer there practically every afternoon.

The display was a very elaborate one, arranged by R. T. Winders, of the Sun company, and consisted of large photographs of all the leading people. By arrangements with a local theatre where Universal pictures are shown, a card appeared in the window advertising the bill of the theatre, and a slide at the theatre called attention to the display.

The Sun company has nine downtown drug stores in Los Angeles, and others at Redlands, San Diego and Pasadena, and this display will be used at each one.

"Lost On the Desert" may be the next picture produced by Colin Campbell, of the Selig Poloscope company, and if it is it will show the wanderings of a party of photoplayers (including Mr. Campbell, and members of his Selig company) in their search for a road.

The company, in returning from the desert region in the vicinity of Oxnard lost their way and the trip, which should be made easily in two hours, required about six. Mr. Campbell contends it is the jinx brought on by the players putting over a snipe hunt at midnight while at the desert filming scenes for "The Carpet From Bagdad," in which extra people were made the victims, and induced to hold the sack over the sage bushes.

May Rank with "The Spoilers"

The Campbell company made the final scenes for the film version of the Harold MacGrath story and will next take up "The Rosary," by Edward E. Rose, and scenario by Lanier Bartlett, of the Selig west coast scenario department. In the opinion of Mr. Bartlett, this play offers greater opportunities for a photoplay than any he has read, and he believes this will make a picture that will rank with that of "The Spoilers."

Max Figman and Lolita Robertson, his wife, have returned to Los Angeles after finishing an engagement in "The Old Curiosity Shop" at the Alcazar Theatre, San Francisco, Cal.

LOLITA ROBERTSON

They have started work on "The Hoosier Schoolmaster," a feature to be released by the Masterpiece Film Company. Mr. Figman says he once thought that stage work was the finest thing imaginable, but now he much prefers acting in pictures and hopes that he is a "regular celluloid actor."

Every photographer and cameraman on the Universal lot is laughing at Director Wilfred Lucas for his manner of taking still pictures for "Trey. o' Hearts, No. 9." Before leaving the studio Manager Bernstein urged that he be sure and see that a good snapshot be secured of George Larkin, playing Alan Law, when he jumped from the top crossbar of the ship Alden Bessie in San Pedro harbor.

"Yes, I will look after it," Lucas assured the manager; "I will take the picture myself." When everything was in readiness for Larkin to climb out on the bar, the cameraman called the director's attention to the still camera, ready to take the picture by the mere pressing of the lever.

The word was given Larkin to jump, and down he went, seventy-five feet or more, into the ocean, and all the time the director stood gasping for breath. Afterwards he explained that he felt just like he was going down himself and forgot to press the button.

But the motion picture cameraman was on the job, and those who saw the film run at the studio projecting room say the picture gives them the sensation of falling.

Ten Stone Elephants at Zoo Entrance

Ten life-sized stone elephants have been completed and are now placed in position at the entrance to the Selig Jungle Zoo on Mission road, and the greatest motion picture wonderland of the world will soon be opened.

Recently a black leopard from India was added to the collection, but it cannot accustom itself to concrete floors, walls and eating troughs, and it is feared this animal will die.

Every animal family at the Zoo has a Kathlyn—named for Kathlyn Williams—and now that Kathlyn, the big puma, has a wee kitten, it's named Kathlyn, Jr.

CARLYLE BLACKWELL AND HIS COMPANY EN ROUTE FROM LOS ANGELES TO PINE CREST, CAL.

WILL START LOS ANGELES FILM PAPER

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Los Angeles, Sept. 12.

Los Angeles motion picture fans are to receive copies of the first edition of a motion picture weekly newspaper published in the interests of motion pictures generally, and to advertise Clune's Auditorium, Broadway and Exclusive Theatres primarily.

Phil Norton, in charge of the publicity department of the W. H. Clune Amusement Company, is to be editor-in-chief, and while he will not give out the name of the newspaper, he advises that he has secured the best men in filmdom of the West coast to serve as associate editors.

The paper will be a five-column folio, printed on excellent book paper, and will be made up of stories and articles concerning motion pictures and players.

NEWSPAPER SUBSCRIPTION GIVEN WITH TICKETS

Special to The Motion Picture News

Hazard, Ky., Sept. 15.

The Perry Theatre and the local weekly newspaper are trying out a unique business boosting and circulation building scheme which is not only attracting considerable interest, but "delivering the goods," also.

The plan is to give each subscriber to the newspaper at one dollar the year a coupon which, when properly signed by the publishers, will admit the subscriber to the picture theater one time each week, or for fifty-two weeks.

The regular admission price at the theatre is ten cents, actually giving the subscriber $6.20 value for one dollar.

COSMOS SOON TO RELEASE FEATURES

The Cosmos Feature Film Company is preparing to enter an extensive advertising campaign on their forthcoming features, "Lena Rivers," with Beulah Poynter in the title role; "Children of the Ghetto," from Zangwill's famous novel, and a number of others.

Beulah Poynter, besides being an emotional actress of wide repute, is equally well known as a playwright. Further news of this company's plans may be expected shortly.

OPENS ATLANTA OFFICE

The World Film Corporation has opened offices in Atlanta and is preparing to go after southern business.

Hunter Bennett, assistant general manager of the corporation, came to Atlanta and had personal charge of the arrangements for opening the southern branch. He has just returned from the Pacific coast where he established a working business for the West.

Arthur Hyman has been named permanent manager of the local office.

SCREEN CLUB INVESTS

At the suggestion of William Oldknow and Robert Daly, members of the Screen Club, that organization has purchased a bale of cotton to help the South over the loss of the European market, for the reason that that section of the country has always taken great interest in motion pictures.

Throughout the South many individuals are buying bales of cotton and storing them in bonded warehouses until next year, when there will be a better market for them abroad.

"THIRTY LEAGUES UNDER THE SEA"

(Submarine Film Corp.—Six Parts)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

SUBMARINE motion picture photography establishes a new era in the history of a fast growing field, and "new" is implied in all the sense of the word. The very idea would have been ridiculed a short time ago, just as Columbus and his ideas pertaining to the new world were ridiculed, only the inventors of this wonderful contrivance for taking pictures under the sea, the Williamson brothers, fortunately had not such a hard time in finding one to believe in the possibilities of their invention, as the late Charles J. Hite was far-seeing enough to predict its success. It has most certainly fulfilled all the predictions of its financers, as it is seldom that one sees such a wonderful spectacle.

These pictures, which were taken in a specially constructed photographic chamber with a glass front, have already proved their value as on their first showing before the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D. C., which many scientists attended, numerous unknown varieties of fish and sea plants were discovered, for which there were no names.

The mysteries of the depths, which heretofore have not been penetrated, are here laid before everyone, and by sitting through the five thousand feet of film that they comprise, it can candidly be said that one gleans a lot more from them than one would in listening to lectures or books dealing with the same subject.

Coral reefs, subaqueous forests and gardens, living corals, strange fish and last of all, gigantic sharks have all been caught by the camera, under the skillful manipulation of Carl L. Gregory, of the Thanhouser Company, who with the Williamson brothers went to no end of trouble and consumed practically all of four months in procuring the wide variety of scenes.

Besides these numerous views of sea life, the spectator is given a touch of real excitement when J. Ernest Williamson descends to the depths armed only with a knife and engages in a ferocious combat with a man-eating shark.

Unfortunately this is the most indistinct part of the film; that is, in parts of the combat, but one is enabled to see him send a few knife strokes into the animal, and all will realize the great risk that this man took for the benefit of civilization.

In the introductory part of the picture the lowering and arranging of the submarine tube is shown, and to make matters clearer a cross section of the tube taken in the studio with the men at work inside is cast on the screen.

After this a number of the native boys of Nassau, the capital of the Bahama Islands, are shown diving for coins thrown them by the passengers of the ship. They may be seen swimming through the water and picking the coppers from the sandy bottom. The waters in this part of the world are unusually clear and some very fine views come in these few scenes.

A trip under the sea from Nassau to Watlings Island, where Columbus first set foot on the new world, is then afforded the spectators, and after this comes the combat with the shark.

The educational, instructive and even commercial and industrial value of these pictures is priceless, and doubtless in the ones that are to follow, little faults will be perfected.

But simply for this series of pictures the world will extend their heartiest thanks to the inventors of the submarine apparatus, Captain Charles Williamson, J. Ernest Williamson and George M. Williamson.

INTERESTING FILM REVIEWS

PRODUCTIONS FROM ALL PROGRAMS

GENERAL FILM PROGRAM

"In a Prohibition Town." (Edison. Split reel. Wed., Sept. 30.)—The practical joker gets in some of his stale smartness and labels a grip with the terrible word "Whisky"—terrible because this happens in that perennial butt of the paragraphers, the dry town. Incongruous as it may seem, flypaper is the means by which the innocent drummer is revenged on the joker, flypaper being the drummer's specialty.

"Love by the Pound." (Edison. Mon., Sept. 28.)—In the tenth of "Wood B. Wedd's Sentimental Experiences" he tries to wed a girl who is not figuratively, but literally, worth her weight in gold, because her rich uncle has promised this to her at her nuptials. And she is not a lightweight, either. But the uncle makes the same stipulation regarding the husband, and Wood B. loses out after a gallant attempt to reach the two hundred-pound mark.

"Buster Brown Gets the Worst of It." (Edison. Split reel. Wed., Sept. 30.)—Anything that Buster does or that happens to him will tickle the children, so because his father does a little joking and turns the laugh on Buster is no reason that it will not please. This picture is shown with "In a Prohibition Town."

"Broncho Billy, a Friend in Need." (Essany. Sat., Sept. 12.)—The popular hero of Western dramas in his favorite role of helping out someone, particularly a pretty girl, when in distress. The girl is the daughter of a storekeeper who has been left in charge of the store. A sum of money concealed there. Broncho Billy knocks and is mistaken for a bandit. When the real bandit turns up, he saves the day, and then the girl has to ask his forgiveness for the way she treated him.

"The Missing Page." (Selig. Sat., Sept. 12.) Forced and unreal drama of three, the wife who has a mad desire to go on the stage, the husband, a physician who opposes her ambition, and a nurse whom he meets after his wife has left him. Through a missing page in a letter, the physician is led to believe that his wife is dead, and when he is about to wed the beautiful nurse, the wife after a long absence loving him madly, reappears to claim her own.

"The Backslider." (Biograph. Mon., Sept. 14.)—Following somewhat along the lines of "Silas Marner," this story depicts how a miser and backslider from church is restored to human feeling and sympathy through a widow and her little child. The man cannot resist the child and offers the poor woman shelter. This kind act saves his bag of money for him when robbers break in, and in the final scene of the picture the man has loosened up a little, bought new clothes and is happy with the widow and child.

"The Joblot Recruits." (Essany. Mon., Sept. 14.)—The manufacturers have condescended to show shop, and contrary to the usual case of the man who talks shop, this picture does not bore, but is as funny as can be. Candidates are invited for a slapstick comedy, and are put through all the undignified feats that such a calling would require expertness in.

"Ye Vengeful Vagabonds." (Selig. Two reels. Mon., Sept. 14.)—Stories of Puritan days in New England have been rare in motion pictures, and this one is so good that it makes up for those that we have not had. The costumes are reproduced with absolute fidelity, and by using several hundred Indians, the director has given us a picture that comes very close to the actual conditions in an early New England stockade town that was constantly threatened by massacres and depredations by Indians. A touch of comedy is introduced in the ducking of the village scold and the village vagabond.

"The Man Who Knew." (Vitagraph. Mon., Sept. 14.)—The woman steals a pendant and knows that the man has seen her. The man hopes that he has been mistaken and later proposes marriage. The woman has returned the pendant, and has sold her brooch to help her mother. She confesses to the man and then he knows that she is the woman for him and they forget the incident together. William Humphrey and Leah Baird play the man and the woman.

"Steve O'Grady's Chance." (Vitagraph. Two reels. Tues., Sept. 15.)—Steve O'Grady is a reporter who loses his job and goes South. He stumbles into a band of robbers, overcomes them and wins the love of a mountain girl, gets the reward, lands a fine place on a newspaper on account of the "scoop," and carries the girl back as his wife. Ned Finley plays the title role, and Edith Storey assists him as Bess, the mountain girl.

"He Nearly Won Out." (Lubin. Split reel. Sat., Sept. 12.)—Concerning the henpecked husband whose home life becomes so unbearable that he decides to drown himself. But he loses his nerve and then learns that his wife has become an heiress. He returns immediately, is received with welcome acclaim, and then lords it over his wife to his heart's content. On the same reel with "Too Many Aunts."

"Too Many Aunts." (Lubin. Split reel. Sat., Sept. 12.)—Just what the name implies. Aunt has written that she is coming to visit, and then wires that she cannot come. Whereupon daddy, sweetheart and chum play aunt. The real aunt turns up after all, and a merry mess it makes of everything. On the same reel with "He Nearly Won Out."

"He Danced Himself to Death." (Vitagraph. Two reels. Sat., Sept. 12.)—Quaint and uproarious farce without a grain of sense or atom of connection in it. But it produces laughter, and this is the most important point for a motion picture audience after all. It will serve as a good tonic for troubled nerves. R. L. Goldberg, the cartoonist, is responsible for it.

"Rastus Knew It Wasn't." (Lubin. Split reel. Tues., Sept. 15.)—Uproarious comedy with John Edwards as the chief funmaker. The Lubin company of ridiculous police also do their share. John goes into a motion picture show and sees that a suspected bomb was perfectly harmless. When he sees one outside, he thinks that it will be the same. But it is different and he gets blown up and falls with an awful thud. On the same reel "She Made Herself Beautiful."

"She Made Herself Beautiful." (Lubin. Split reel. Tues., Sept. 15.)—The ugly wife to please her husband takes the beauty parlor treatment and then doesn't please him any better, because she is too pretty to cook. He brings some guests home and has to go into the kitchen himself. He then resolves that a homely wife who can cook is better than a pretty wife who can't. On the same reel with "Rastus Knew It Wasn't."

"The Eugenic Girl." (Selig. Tues., Sept. 15.)—By beginning as straight comedy and then switching in the middle to farce, this picture makes a bad impression. If the comedy touch could have been kept throughout, then the picture might have been a good one, because the idea is all right, but the peril of inconsistency is too hazardous, and should have been avoided.

ECLECTIC FILM COMPANY

"War-Stricken Louvain." (Eclectic.)—These remarkable photographs of the once beautiful city in the grasp of fire and sword were made by Captain Cherry Cherton, of the British Army, who concealed his camera under his undercoat while he was making the pictures. Once to have seen them is to put away all doubt as to their genuineness. The Belgian soldiers are seen before they were forced to retire from the city, engaged in battle with the advancing Germans.

"Colonel Heezer Liar in the Wilderness." (Eclectic. Split reel.)—Delightfully droll and whimsically animated cartoons by J. R. Bray, in which this time Colonel Heezer Liar journeys to Darkest Africa, is captured by cannibals, put on the pot to roast, but suddenly and without warning is made the chieftain of the tribe. On the same reel with "Strange Animals of South America."

"Strange Animals of South America." (Eclectic. Split reel.)—A valuable educational film that reveals some little known animals of the continent to the south of us, and describes their most distinctive habits. Among the animals that are shown are the paca, the coati, and the tatou or giant armadillo with his impenetrable coat of mail and curious pick-like forepaws that enable him to burrow with great rapidity. On the same reel with "Colonel Heezer Liar in the Wilderness."

"When Youth Meets Youth." (Kleine-Cines. Two reels. Tues., Sept. 15.)—Father and son are unknowingly rivals for the hand of the same girl. The son, because of his spendthrift ways, is disowned by his father, but when he sees that he loves the same woman he resigns in favor of his boy. A strong story with only average photography in the print shown.

"The Devil's Signature." (Essanay. Two reels. Fri., Sept. 7.)—Baffling and mystifying play that maintains most trying suspense until the end. The secret of the murder is hidden from the audience so long that it almost becomes unbearable; or if suspicion has turned to the ancient servant, the uncertainty is held up until that is nearly as irritating. It is an unusual picture, and one that will score.

"A Study in Feet." (Vitagraph. Fri., Sept. 11.)—Novel and entertaining although only feet, and ugly ones as well as dainty, appear in the picture. Yet a fairly connected story is revealed in this pedal manner, which is punctuated every now and then with the pleasing surprises of giving a little more than the title justifies.

"Squaring the Triangle." (Lubin. Fri., Sept. 11.)—No reference is made in this title to the eternal triangle, which might easily be squared by bringing in a fourth party. The Triangle is a ranch, and the owner goes West and engages work on it, incognito. Things go badly with him, and the cowboys of a mean disposition hang him up by the arms for getting the best of them. His identity is revealed when the sheriff comes, and incredible as it may seem, the owner retains the ringleader's daughter because he needs her as a helpmate.

"Oh! Look Who's Here." (Selig. Fri., Sept. 11.)—The militant suffragette wife and the worn-out husband do not agree, and while the latter tries life on a farm, the suffragette hires out as a policewoman. The would-be farmer has all the troubles pictured of his class, and the policewoman does the wrong thing on every occasion. Pretty good comedy.

"The Secret Nest." (Biograph. Sat., Sept. 12.)—Strong drama replete with gripping situations. The story will appeal especially to those who prefer to see the interrelations of character and emotional intensity with just that repression that prevents the acting from seeming forced and artificial.

"The Green Rose." (Kalem. Tues., Sept. 22.)—Breaking somewhat from established lines, this drama portrays the attempt of a guardian, a scientist, to poison his ward and get her fortune. He adopts the unusual method of soaking a rose in anacide, a deadly drug, the mere touch of which kills. The drama is performed with genuine intensity by Alice Joyce, Tom Moore, Marguerite Courtot, Jere Austin and Mary Ross.

"Jones' Wedding Day." (Kalem. Fri., Sept. 25.)—Capital farce comedy on the waiting at the church theme. Jones is arrested for speeding on the way to the minister's home, and his prospective bride and her parents are put into fits of exasperation by his non-appearance. But he gets out of jail in another man's clothes in time to be married. John E. Brennan is the delayed bridegroom.

"The Vanishing Tribe." (Kalem. Two parts. Wed., Sept. 23.)—An old Indian legend of how a magic spell was cast over a tribe and causes it to vanish into thin air is made the basis of this two-part picture. The spell is worked by a medicine man who promises an Indian princess that any warriors who try to steal her child will disappear. The whole tribe pursues the princess and her husband, Big Moon, and at the moment when it seems that they will overtake them, the tribe vanishes.

"Post No Bills:" (Edison. Wed., Sept. 23.)—Rural comedy of the eloping couple and how they first outwit the unconsenting aunt and then win her forgiveness. This is all very funny, because the author, Mark Swan, has not followed the customery lines.

"The Adventure of the Hasty Elopement." (Edison. Mon., Sept. 21.)—Being the ninth story of "Octavius—Amateur Detective," by Frederic Arnold Kummer. As in the others of the series, the end is a clever twist that takes the audience completely by surprise. Just when we think that Octavius is in the hottest water by a piece of Octavian luck he gets the upper hand of his opponents.

"The New Reporter." (Biograph. Thurs., Sept. 10.)—A lively drama of great interest in which the daughter of the managing editor who is running for mayor obtains convicting evidence against the graft opposition. A fine fire scene is shown. The fire escape breaking away and carrying a number of men to the street is a good thriller.

"Snakeville's Most Popular Lady." (Essanay. Thurs., Sept. 10.)—Funny at first, but dull toward the end, as not enough variety of scene and action is furnished. Slim and his rival exhaust their pockets by voting for their girls and then a miner comes along and places such a lot of money on his favorite that both give up in despair.

"Bella's Elopement." (Vitagraph. Thurs., Sept. 10.)—The other woman who had aroused the suspicions of the wife turns out to be her husband's sister. The wife realizes she has been a little too suspicious and all ends well. The race between the train and the auto could be prolonged to afford greater excitement. Maurice Costello and Estelle Mardo play the husband and wife.

"On Lonesome Mountain." (Lubin. Two reels. Thurs., Sept. 10.)—The son, who is accused of robbing his father is sent away to the mountains, leaving his financee behind. He meets and marries a moonshiner's daughter who had saved his life. His son's innocence being established, the father visits him with the other girl. His wife leaves him and is accidentally shot by her father. A fair story. Some good light effects are obtained, but Lubin has favored us with better photography as a whole.

"Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 56." (Selig. Thurs., Sept. 10.)—Civil War veterans gather in Detroit; Congressional leaders for lowering food prices; scene in one of New York's temporary markets; General Carranza, now provisional president of Mexico, enters the capitol; game between Boston and St. Louis National League teams; General Bonhomme, commandant of the Belgian army and other apparently genuine scenes from abroad.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

"Little Sister." (Rex. Thurs., Sept. 24.)—Bob Leonard and Ella Hall, and their usual supports, Harry Carter and Alan Forrest make up the cast of this highly entertaining drama. The reformation of the perpetual drunkard is brought about by force, when his little sister marries a detective.

"The Girl and the Smuggler." (Victor. Fri., Sept. 18.)—The assistant lighthouse keeper is a smuggler, and is brought to bay by a revenue officer, who also wins the heart of the head keeper's daughter. Not a very strong story, but some good action appears. In the print shown the photography was poor. Walter Miller and Irene Wallace are the leads.

"Elsie's Uncle." (Victor. Two reels. Fri., Sept. 25.)—A highly amusing comedy, but quite conventional. Elsie is bad and is finally expelled from school. Her lover dresses as her uncle and comes to take her away, but finds his rival already there dressed in the same manner. When the real uncle appears, a number of comical situations follow until at last Elsie manages to get away with her lover. Elsie Albert and Sidney Mason play the leads.

"Be Neutral." (Powers. Fri., Sept. 25.)—An actress seeks employment as a maid, just for the experience. She enters the house of a man whose wife is a confirmed bridge fiend and a heavy loser. Besides mending her evil ways she wins the heart of the son of the family. Edna Maison, Ray Gallagher and Helen Wright are the main characters of this novel story.

"Jane's Lovers." (Joker. Wed., Sept. 23.)—Ernest Shields in one of the best of comedies. He uses a pitchfork and mallet on all his rivals until they bother him no more. Shield's make-up is half the comedy.

"For the Hand of Jane." (Joker. Wed., Sept. 23.)—Ernest Shields appear again in this comedy with mallet and hose with which he distributes such quantities of fun that one's sides will ache when the picture is over.

"The 'Dear' Hunter." (Universal Ike. Tues., Sept. 22.)—The English visitor to the ranch is made a joke of by the boys, but he finally fools them all by winning the heart of the ranch owner's daughter. Funny in parts, but inferior as a whole. Ray Gallagher and Louise Glaum are the principals.

"East Lynne in Bugville." (Crystal. Tues., Sept. 22.)—An old film featuring Pearl White. The play "East Lynne" doesn't go very well in Bugville, due to its poor acting and a group of boys in the gallery who are continually up to tricks. Quite a few old fun-makers are revived. Funny as a whole, but too much padding.

MUTUAL PROGRAM

"Broken Nose Bailey." (Reliance. Two reels. Sat., Sept. 12.)—The bitter and violent rivalry of gangsters with the efforts of a detective to capture the leader of one of the gangs, who was known by his broken nose, is revealed in this two reel picture. Some interest is added by the good Samaritan work of a physician who rescues the leader from the water and then straightens his nose.

"The Emperor's Spy." (Thanhouser. Two reels. Sun., Sept. 13.)—Love does remarkable things with men and women sometimes, and in this picture it makes a complete transformation in a woman's character. But the trouble is that she was in love both before and after the transformation. The woman is a spy, and obtains valuable information from a young engineer by working on his love. But when she overhears how he defends her, she returns the papers without his knowing anything about it.

"Bill Goes into Business for Himself." (Komic. Sun., Sept. 13.)—In the sixth comedy of this entertaining series, Bill starts a lunch counter in opposition to the Dutchman on the corner. He and his friend, Fatty, bring the provisions from home, including savory coffee. Business booms at first, but the Dutchman is angered when he is served ink for coffee; he was just testing the stand, and starts a rough-house. The boss puts Bill to scrubbing floors as punishment.

"The Master Hand." (Princess. Fri., Sept. 18.)—Well-acted drama of the crook who conceals his wrong-doing from his daughter and spends his ill-gotten gains in sending her to boarding school. The detective on the father's trail falls in love with the daughter. The father is betrayed by a confederate, but dies resisting capture, and the horrible disclosure that comes to the girl is softened to some extent by the loving embrace of the detective.

"The Mettle of a Man." (Thanhouser. Sun. Sept. 20.)—Moderately interesting drama and played with intelligence and distinction. There is nothing new in the subject matter or in the plot, but the way in which it is presented atones to some degree for the commonplaceness of the material. A girl's father has been falsely convicted; the real evidence is in the hands of a political boss. His secretary steals this information which frees the father and opens the way for the marriage of the young man and the girl.

"The New Janitor." (Keystone. Sept. 19.)—The comical Charles Chapman in a laughable farce that will arouse peals of laughter from any audience. Chapman is a bungling janitor; he is always a bungling something or other, and the way he carries himself is immeasurably ludicrous.

"The Horse Trader." (Royal. Sat., Sept. 19.)—Two countrymen love the same woman, and the lengths to which they go in their efforts to beat out the other make a fairly diverting comedy. Blindfolding to let luck have a hand in the choice of the woman, swapping of horses and many other things too numerous to mention contribute to the fun.

"The Death Mask." (Kay-Bee. Two reels. Fri., Sept. 25.)—Several realistic knife fights are staged which materially heighten the interest of this tale of Indians. The fearless brave proves that the superstitions of the Tribe of the Three Brothers are unfounded by defeating two of them and discovering that the third, who wears a death mask, is a woman, whom he marries. The story is supplemented by beautiful scenes and excellent photography.

"THE HEART OF A BRUTE"

(Balboa-Box Office—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

HUMAN nature is a strange thing after all, and it takes a wise man indeed to fathom all its depths. Consistency is usually not one of its most basic characteristics, and consequently it is often startling to observe the person who is guided by instinct; it takes such queer and unexpected turns.

Even the professors have discovered this truth, and it has made them wary in their zeal to generalize. Hence also, the great danger of trying to disparage a play or a picture on the ground of being contrary to human nature.

Yet there is this much to be said on the other side: No play or picture has got any business presenting an extraordinary event that grows out of a seeming inconsistency in character without making plain that it is extraordinary, and without trying to pawn it off on the public as the most natural thing in the world under the circumstances.

When we see ordinary persons on the screen we expect them to act in accordance with reasonable lines of conduct, and if they don't we have the right to question why.

Now it has been observed that there are people of the most brutal nature who on occasion will become as tender and as gentle as lambs, especially in the sight of weakness and affliction. This is the kind of heart the brute in this picture has. But it would have been a great mistake to show his extreme cruelty and callousness to those he holds in contempt, and then to have shown him performing a deed of unusual kindness.

This difficulty has been bridged by making it unmistakable that he is always moved to kindness and pity by the sight of suffering in those weaker than himself. The character then becomes entirely plausible, and we are prepared for the incidents that spring from this trait.

Therefore, when we see the brute caring for the poor violin player, we are not surprised, and when he conceals his love for the violinist's sister and utterly effaces himself by going off without telling her, we are firmly convinced that the man, brute that he is, is not unworthy of this deed of supreme self-sacrifice.

"THE COLONEL'S WIFE"

(Eclectic—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

SOMEBODY has said that the heart can be touched more closely through a little child than through any other means. Wayward mothers have been brought to their senses by their soft cheeks; hard-hearted old misers have mistaken the yellow curls for their beloved gold, and found them far more precious.

And now comes along "The Colonel's Wife," an Eclectic drama in three parts, that threatened to end disastrously, but the wife finds out that after all the love of a little child is the most wonderful thing in the world, and the realization of this truth keeps her from ruining her own life.

Henny Porten interprets the role of the wife, and she does it admirably. She is a large woman, but graceful and lithe in her movements, and fits in splendidly for work before the camera.

Her role is one that calls for emotionalism, but she passes easily over the dangers and the pitfalls that such a part throws in the path of many actresses. There is no painful, agonizing surrender to tears and gnashing of teeth, but even in the most intense and trying situations of the play she acts her part in a dignified quiet manner.

The staging even more than the acting tells where the film was made, Berlin. Elaborateness characterizes many of the sets, but never to the point of appearing tawdry and meretricious. Always there is the feeling of prosperous and substantial solidity, just as one would expect to find in the home of a German colonel of means and social position.

Ford in Dual Role

Director General George Melford, of the Kalem Glendale studio, has been busy with the production of "The Village Blacksmith," a small-town story.

Francis Ford and Grace Cunard recently played the parts of a human interest story, produced by Mr. Ford, who played the dual role of twin brothers, both in love with the same girl. The title is "The District Attorney's Brother."

In the picture, "Her Eternal Victory," now being filmed at the Selig Jungle Zoo studio, Eugenie Besserer is featured. The picture will answer the question: How great is a mother's love? It is from the scenario of William E. Wing.

J. Warren Kerrigan and Jacques Jaccard are authors of "The Dreamer," recently produced with the former playing the title role of a Western young man.

By caring for a friendless Indian the young Westerner learns of a valuable deposit of gold, and is thereby able to secure sufficient wealth of search for his father, estranged from the mother, and a happy reunion follows. George Periolat, Mrs. Benson and Vera Sisson play prominent parts.

Lease a Train for a Day

Director Al. Christie makes a poor railroad conductor, according to a ten-year-old boy, who was on the extra list of the Nester company in the production of "All Aboard," which required the leasing of a Salt Lake Railroad passenger train for a full day, and the use of track between Los Angeles and Long Beach, a distance of twenty-one miles.

The train with a company of fifty-seven aboard left the L. A. station at nine o'clock and reached Long Beach at four in the afternoon. "It was a slow run, I'll admit," Christie confessed to Manager Bernstein, "but it was great to prolong the expectation of many who had never been to Long Beach. And besides, we made sixty-one scenes while en route."

One thing cannot be explained, however, and that is how the company secured pictures of the Santa Fe and Southern Pacific railroads' stations while using Salt Lake tracks for locations. Mr. Christie has produced "When the Mummy Cried for Help," in which Victoria Forde, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran played the leading parts.

A semi-educational motion picture has been produced under the direction of Henry McRae, in which Eugene V. Rich, the Boy Mayor of Portland, Ore., and his secretary, Earl R. Goodwin, played the leading parts in the one-reeler, "The Boy Mayor." The scenario is by H. G. Stafford and Calder Johnstone.

Juvenile City Government a Success

Two or three years ago the boys of Portland, with assistance of the city officers, nominated juvenile officers to have charge of affairs pertaining to youths.

After the tickets were nominated, an election was held for a juvenile mayor, four commissioners and an auditor. The commission form of government was used throughout and the council consisted of the mayor and commissioners, who elected a municipal judge, city attorney, city treasurer, clerk of the court and a chief of police.

AS the Pastime and the Beacon were the bitterest rivals of the Unique, Weller was certainly interested, and, even though he did not purchase the screen, the latter served to turn his thoughts in the proper direction.

After he had received additional letters of the same tenor, all mentioning the other theatres, he unconsciously assimilated the suggestion that his rivals were arming themselves in force to combat him. This aroused in him a desire to defend himself. So he naturally turned to those things which the letters made him realize he needed. Jensen had taken care that the facts should fit the case.

The firms kept Jensen supplied with the latest information in regard to the progress of his proteges. The results proved eminently satisfactory, for the rival exhibitors were directing their energies along the correct lines, and the cut-throat competition which had signalized their efforts heretofore was gradually dying out. It was a distinct advance in the welfare of the industry.

While the companies were hammering away at the unreceptive Jensen complemented their efforts with a series of talks on exhibiting. These were set up in typewritten form and sent to the different managers in a plain envelope. There was nothing that would identify the communication as coming from the exchange. And as there was no obvious iron in the fire, the whole was veiled in mystery.

AT first the talks were general in their nature. After a while, however, Jensen became kindly, not offensively, personal. He hurled fact after fact at the managers, stating specific, concrete errors which he had discovered on his visits. There was no gainsaying his facts, for proof stuck out in every line.

During all this preliminary work, Jensen was building up his programs to meet the conditions he had found. These were accepted with less and less aggressiveness by the exhibitors, one or two of whom grudgingly, admitted that he was finally giving them something fairly decent. The leaven was working; Jensen was content to bide his time.

In the meanwhile, he kept in touch with those theatres, the managers of which he had dubbed impossible. When he learned of the managerial demise of one of them, an inevitable occurrence, he would immediately communicate with the new head and, if he found him up to the standard, Jensen would add another to his list of converts. It all seemed like missionary work, pure and simple, but it paid.

Finally the incessant complaints with which the exchange had been bombarded, died away to a trickle. By this time Jensen's anonymous talks sent out in weekly instalments, had been running four months. He felt that he could now reveal his purpose. Accordingly he wrote a "confession" to each exhibitor that was personal in the extreme. He unfolded to each his plans and explained how they had been carried out.

THROUGHOUT his letter he made clear the sincerity of purpose. He proved, by his efforts, until then without personal profit, that an exchange was not a leech on the motion picture business; that its existence was warranted, provided its purpose was to lend a helping hand.

Jensen, moreover, did not err by being too modest. He had been the means of averting many a failure and ending a contest that threatened the life of the industry in his locality. It was no more than right that he should reap the harvest.

And reap it he did. Letters poured into the exchange from all quarters. Those exhibitors who were near at hand called on him and personally thanked him.

With all of them in such a receptive mood, Jensen launched forth on a legitimate advertising campaign. Letters and follow-ups, with his signature printed across the face of the envelope to attract attention, expounded the value of his program.

All these were further strengthened by personal letters to the managers showing why such and such a feature would prove profitable in the exhibitor's special case. Every argument was well bolstered by facts.

TO keep his hand still more upon the pulse of his market, Jensen examined the local newspapers of the several towns for events important to the locality, often being enabled thereby to rent a film that would arouse favorable comment because of its timeliness. The credit would generally go to the exhibitor who would, therefore, feel grateful to Jensen for the suggestion.

Jensen was the first to make use of "community leaders." He selected a person in each section where he especially desired to fortify himself, to "talk up" his program and persuade others to attend those theatres that used his service.

He supplied these representatives in advance with little pamphlets explaining all the important points in the photoplays, so that they could talk intelligently about them. As a reward, he gave them an order for a certain number of tickets on the loyal theatres.

By these and many other methods he impressed the fact upon the exhibitors that Jensen was a synonym for success. And no man is going to find fault with or refuse to listen to one who puts money in his pocket.

They were now far from feeling resentful for any suggestions. On the contrary, they turned to Jensen for advice, an acknowledgment that the exchange, as represented by him, was a distinct and valuable commercial asset in the game.

LOUISVILLE CHURCHES TO USE BIBLICAL FILMS

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Louisville, Sept. 16.

THE Louisville Ministerial Association is considering a plan to use motion pictures in connection with church work.

Many of the clergy are of the opinion that film pictures of Bible stories and other religious subjects will be of great assistance in the work of Sunday school classes, and will also provide suitable material for study and entertainment for all churchgoers.

An organization has already been formed in the East for the purpose of securing suitable films for church work.

CHURCHES TO TAKE OUT LICENSES FOR FILMS

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Buffalo, Sept. 16.

THE Buffalo churches are going in strong for motion picture entertainments this winter, to take the place of the old-time and tiresome lecture courses.

Several of the churches have procured the necessary equipment and will begin a series of film evenings at once. However, all churches which adopt this method of entertainment must obtain a license the same as the regular theatres, as last year some of the churches made a regular business of it, with the result that the local men put in a complaint. Now, if they continue to do so, they must have a license.

FORMER WHITE ELEPHANT NOW MAKING MONEY

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Atlanta, Ga., Sept. 16.

The Grand, formerly known in the theatrical world as Jake Wells' "white elephant," is now in its nineteenth week as a successful photoplay house de luxe.

Under the capable management of Harry B. Hearn the theatre has become one of the most popular resorts in the city for lovers of motion pictures and there is a full house at every performance.

THE POISONED BIT

A Drama by Clyde Morey

Tom had been held by the gypsies, but got away and, exhausted, fell asleep on Colonel Standish's doorstep. Next morning learning the boy's story, the Colonel employed him in his racing stables, and thereupon began Tom's real career. He became a jockey and won several races, but lost one on which the Colonel had staked his entire fortune. Then he was summarily dismissed; but eventually proved to the Colonel's satisfaction that a poisoned bit had made the horse lose and that this bit was the work of a dastardly culprit named Maloney. He eventually marries the Colonel's daughter.

In two parts. 2,000 ft. To be released Friday, Oct. 2nd

IN BUSINESS FOR HIMSELF

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Pittsburgh, Sept. 5.

Harvey B. Day, formerly manager of the Pittsburgh branch office of the George Kleine attractions, has severed his connection with that firm and is now in business for himself.

He has located in the Decatur building in Fourth avenue and is one of the busiest men in Pittsburgh. Mr. Day has a host of friends in this city and is very popular with the motion picture men here so that his new venture should be most successful.

PLAN ASSOCIATION BALL

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Greater New York has hired the four floors of the Grand Central Palace for the fourth annual entertainment and ball to be held on Monday night, December 7.

No program will be issued for this ball.

This ball is being held for the usual purpose of getting together the manufacturers, the photoplayers, the exhibitors and 50,000 photoplay patrons, and one gala time is assured.

BOOK "SPOILERS" AGAIN IN LOS ANGELES

"The Spoilers" has been booked for the third engagement at Clune's Auditorium, Los Angeles, Cal. First the picture was run two weeks, then later returned for a week, and on October 5 the fourth week will be commenced. The Golden Gate Film Exchange is handling this picture in California.

ATLANTA THEATRE CHANGES ITS POLICY

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Atlanta, Ga., Sept. 16.

Harry B. Hearn, representing Jake Wells as manager of the Grand, Atlanta's biggest motion picture theatre, has inauguarated the new policy of continuous performance from noon until 10:30 p. m., instead of the old plan of four shows daily.

The alteration in policy was made by Mr. Hearn after a careful study of the local situation in twenty successive weeks of prosperous operation.

One of the most notable successes of the Grand, under Mr. Hearn's management, has been Annette Kellermann in "Neptune's Daughter." In twenty-four successive performances this picture recently was seen by more than 40,000.

"BELOVED ADVENTURER" FULL OF ACTION

Because "The Beloved Adventurer," the fifteen-part Lubin series, written by Emmett Campbell Hall especially for Arthur V. Johnson and Lottie Briscoe, has been described as a character study, it should not be thought to be lacking in thrilling situations.

On the contrary there are a dozen incidents that will cause the most hardened spectator to hold his breath in suspense or gasp with astonishment. This is not merely by reason of the exciting "business," but because the thrills are legitimate and are logical developments from reasonable situations, not mere "stunts" dragged in for the sake of spectacular effect, and because these incidents have been so introduced as to obtain dramatic contrasts of startling yet artistic abruptness.

Instead of following the not unusual course of writing his stories around some big mechanical effects or twisting machine-made plots to embrace them, the author of "The Beloved Adventurer" has made the sensational and spectacular scenes incident to and not the bases of the fifteen unit-plots contained within the one master-plot.

Sometimes the photoplaywright is hampered and limited by the consideration of expense, but it was not so in this case, the Lubin Company being determined that nothing should stand in the way of a perfect production, and giving the author a free hand. There are, as a consequence, some effects which ordinarily would have been considered as "big" enough to serve as feature scenes in some multiple reel productions, but which in "The Beloved Adventurer" are only incidents in the single-reel units—as, for instance, a head-on collision and the wrecking and burning of two railway trains—and the burning and blowing up of a ship.

Incidentally it may be remarked that the novel idea of publishing the complete story in the form of a handsome book, to be sold by picture theatres, has already proven a complete success, the first announcement bringing a flood of orders for from five hundred to five thousand copies.

REPLICA OF COUNTERFEITING PLANT IN FILMS

The initial release of the Eaco films, "Below the Dead Line," in which Edwin August, who has won considerable fame as an actor, author and producer, is featured, is a thrilling underworld story in which a number of counterfeiters figure chiefly.

To secure the true-to-life interiors of the home of the counterfeiter, Mr. August engaged a former counterfeiter to supervise the erecting of the scenery at the Pathé Jersey City studio.

Do You Want A Piano?

a projection machine, a screen, a ticket chopper, a lobby frame, a lot of new chairs, a box of carbons, a kit of operators' tools, a bottle of machine oil, or any one of a hundred and more other things used in your theatre?

You want the best that money will buy. Personal investigation requires time and discomfort. There is a very simple way to avoid this, and get every possible item of information about anything you want, at the price you want.

Fill in, sign and mail the form below, and give the approximate price you want to pay. Or, if you prefer, write us a short note, outlining in full just what information you want.

In a very short time you will have, at your home or theatre, all available information about the products in which you are interested. Then, at your leisure, you can compare merits and prices, and make your final selection.

There is no obligation nor cost attached. A two cent stamp to mail your inquiry is your only expense.

No matter how thrilling a story one may read, interest is not sustained if poor type, poor paper and poor press work make hard work for the eyes. It's the same with motion pictures. A clear picture is as necessary as a good scenario.

Because the basic product is right, the clearest pictures are on "Eastman" film. Look for the stencil mark in the margin.

EASTMAN KODAK CO.,

TITLES

Our Title Department has been reorganized, elaborately equipped and placed under the direction of recognized experts.

Its highly perfected apparatus, linotype machine and job presses enable us to produce the most difficult title work in any language—artistically, accurately and quickly—and at lower prices than have ever yet been quoted.

DEVELOPING AND PRINTING

Save money and insure the best results by entrusting your work to the largest and most complete commercial plant in America.

SMALL UP-KEEP

MOTIOGRAPH

1914 MODEL

With the hardened and ground parts used in the late Model MOTIOGRAPH it can't wear out—the up-keep is brought to a minimum, your pictures are ROCK STEADY even after twelve months constant use.

Compare the Motiograph with any other new machine, for Up-keep and Rock Steady Pictures, after a twelve months run, and you can easily see why the Modern Theatres are installing MOTIOGRAPHS.

Write for catalogue.

Sydney Ayres, of the American Company, is working on a two-reel subject to be called "Galahad of Twilight." It is a French-Canadian story, the scenes of which will be taken in the mountains. Vivian Rich is cast as a French-Canadian girl, a part which seems to have been especially written for her.

John Steppling, of the American Company, recently discovered his picture in an old book called "Commencement Days," in which was a novelization of a play in which he played one of the leading parts. Mr. Steppling has an extensive experience on the stage and will be remembered by some by his clever work in "Throwing the Bull," a farce on "Quo Vadis."

In "Foundlings of Father Time," a picture in the course of production by Charles Giblyn, of the Universal the public will see a fine portrayal of emotions.

PAYNE ESCAPES FROM WAR ZONE

Among those American tourists who have suffered from the grim realities of the European war is Herbert Payne, millionaire clubman of Menlo Park, California, executive head of the California Motion Picture Corporation.

Mr. Payne left New York during the month of June for a motor tour of Europe. For a time he was heard from, then came the war and silence. A host of friends and relatives in both San Francisco and New York made every attempt to reach him by cable but were unable to get into communication with him for almost five weeks.

Finally a cable informed them that he had just escaped from the war zone to Holland.

Mr. Payne and his wife, who was Vera de Sable, arranged for passage to this country, and will arrive next month. It had originally been planned to send Mr. Payne the initial positive print of "Salomy Jane" for private exhibition in London, but the war prevented him from carrying out the plan.

FEATURE FIRM INCREASES STOCK

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Buffalo, Sept. 16.

The Buffalo Feature Film Company, of 15 Swan street, which controls the New York State rights of "The Littlest Rebel," announced through its management that it has increased its capital stock from $25,000 to $100,000. Some of the biggest theatrical men of Buffalo are interested in the enterprise.

They have just closed a year's contract with the Associated Feature Booking Company, Incorporated, of New York, for a monthly feature. The initial feature to be introduced in Buffalo shortly is "Ireland a Nation," a five-reel feature written and produced by Walter MacNamara, author of "Traffic in Souls."

ECLAIR'S "BOY" APPEALS

The Eclair Film Company released on September 9 a most appealing picture entitled "Boy," which brings forth the abilities of a clever juvenile artist, Charles Jackson. Alec B. Francis contributes a wonderful piece of character acting. The story of a boy's love for a human derelict and the wonders which it worked form a most engrossing story.

MORGAN PORTRAIT POSTERS

ALL UNIVERSAL STARS

THE COLONEL'S WIFE

3-part drama that deals with a situation likely to arise in any family. The film, however, abounds in situations new to the screen. A young man fights a duel with his friend in order to clear his step-mother from the suspicions of his father—a well developed climax and a powerful ending. 1-3-6 sheet posters.

COLONEL HEEZA LIAR

IN THE WILDERNESS

In which the screen's champion comedian defends his title as the world's funniest, assisted by the celebrated cartoonist, J. R. Bray. The Colonel is an American cartoon character who started a nation-wide wave of laughter and speeds it up with every release.

On the same reel, STRANGE ANIMALS (South America) in natural colors. An interesting educational of the better sort.

WHEN HONOR CALLS

A 4-part drama that's crowded with punches. A story of ill-advised investment that brings trouble to everybody concerned. The frenzied investors form a mob and storm the house of the man who caused them the loss of their money. The love story is one of unusual entanglements and unexpected development. This strong film hammers its way across. 1-3-6 sheet posters.

THE PERILS OF PAULINE

Even the greatest dangers grow tame when you grow used to them, but your patrons don't have time to get used to the dangers into which Pauline stumbles. With every release she goes a step further in daring, though she started as high up the scale as had ever been reached before. PAULINE'S PULLING STRONGER EVERY WEEK

EXTRA SPECIAL RELEASE

THE PATHÉ DAILY NEWS

also has its correspondents but they're a different sort. The Pathé cameras are on the scene of action and they catch the news in a form which can never be changed—it's news that really happened, History as it's made. No description of a bystander can ever equal in force and vividness the record of a camera that sees more than the human eye and unlike the human memory registers indelibly everything that it takes. The Exhibitor and the War Tax

THE Democrats of the Ways and Means Committee at Washington have agreed upon a bill to provide the war tax asked for by President Wilson in a special message to Congress.

The bill lays a levy of $100 on all motion picture theatres in cities above 15,000 population.

JUST why this levy was made, and on what basis the amount was fixed, no one in the motion picture industry knows.

Nor will anyone in the motion picture industry, with full and necessary authority, appear at Washington to argue against either the levy or its amount.

THE reason for which is that the motion picture industry has no organization of sufficient strength and scope to act for it in such an emergency.

Most, if not all, of the other interests assessed by the war measure will or have had representatives at Washington to lay before the committee the status of their affairs in an effort to lessen or escape this burden.

But so far as motion picture theatres are concerned Congress has little to guide its action except the absurd magazine stories of easy and big profits throughout the industry.

THE news of this tax—which apparently will go through as planned—will be decidedly unwelcome to every exhibitor affected. To many it will prove an unjust burden.

There will be a good deal of strenuous kicking, all of which will avail nothing.

Some exhibitors will appeal personally to their Congressmen, which will help.

But of the practical results to be had from individual appeals to the politician in power the remark made by Governor Cox's secretary at the recent Ohio convention is illuminating.

SAID he, in effect: "If one exhibitor comes to Columbus to see Governor Cox, he is taking long chances on ever getting further than the ante-room.

"But let him come as the authorized representative of an exhibitors' organization and he will probably get as quick and as long an interview as he wants."

WE have quite a lot of individual exhibitor activity today, intelligently, unselfishly directed.

As a result, we have several excellent local and State exhibitors' bodies and a national organization worthy of and demanding the loyal support of every exhibitor.

But it matters little at Washington what Cleveland, or Washington, or New York City has to say; or what California or Michigan sets forth.

And diligent as its officers may be, the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America today has by far too small an enrollment of members and far too slender resources to be able to go to Washington and compel the respect of Congress.

IT is a situation to be deplored; and the lesson is one for the individual exhibitor to take to heart.

He should organize—not next week, or next month, but now.

He should act himself, not wait for an organizer to come around. Let him start his own local or State organization; not delay till some other exhibitor does it for him.

And this applies to all exhibitors—or at least to all who call themselves exhibitors.

This war tax is only an item compared with other problems of all kinds which are right now and soon will be facing all exhibitors and which can only be successfully tackled through organization.

IT is high time for coats off!

A national organization of seven or eight theatres and exhibitors doesn't sound big in numbers. Lots of other organizations lead it in that respect.

But such an organization has a power which no other body of men however great can approach—the power of the screen, capable of conveying with one flash a message to the people of this entire nation.

INSTEAD of being helpless and even unrepresented, the exhibitors of this country can secure, locally, within their States and nationally, almost anything within reason they want. The politician knows it.

But there's only one way—organization, local, State and national.

COATS OFF, GENTLEMEN!

Wisconsin Exhibitors Unite at Milwaukee

James R. Sherwood, of Madison, Elected President of Photoplay Association—Members Prepare for Fight on So-Called Seventh Day Rest Bill—Churches Are Getting Ready to Force Through Legislation to Detriment of Motion Picture Theatres

Special to The Motion Picture News

Milwaukee, Wis., Sept. 22.

AT a meeting at the club room of the Plankington House, Tuesday morning, September 15, at ten o'clock, the state and local exhibitors organized a state association of exhibitors.

The meeting was marked by much good feeling between the few state exhibitors present and the city exhibitors. The gathering was very progressive and in the selection of a name the members set a pace for their brother exhibitors of other states.

Instead of utilizing the words "motion picture" the convention decided upon the title of Wisconsin Photoplay Association as the one being the most characteristic of their organization.

This title was suggested by George Fischer, manager of the Alhambra Theatre, and was unanimously accepted, only after a number of other suggestions containing the words motion picture exhibitor had been turned down.

IN the opening speech of the convention C. H. Phillips, president of the International Motion Picture Association, spoke for the Milwaukee exhibitors and assured the state exhibitors that it was not the wish of the local men to control the state organizaion, as had so many times been charged by the small-town exhibitor, or to have the state body fight their battles for them, but that instead the city exhibitor was ready and willing to fight for his brother throughout the state, provided the state exhibitor would work with him and assist him in the fight at the state legislature this fall when bills antagonistic to their interest would be introduced, and that with the exception of the bills concerning censorship and Sunday closing the Milwaukee exhibitor had no interest in any of them.

Of this last named bill, the so-called Seventh Day Rest Bill, which is scheduled to be introduced at the opening of the legislature this fall, Mr. Phillips said that it was one of the most dangerous ever introduced, and as the churches were back of it there would be a hard fight made to pass it.

He warned the state exhibitor that the city men were tired of fighting the battles at the state capital every year single-handed, and that if the state exhibitor did not get into line and do his share the city organization would hereafter attend only to their own fights and leave the state exhibitor to work out his own salvation.

R. G. NUSS, of Madison, spoke for the state exhibitors and said that while there were not many present at the convention he could safely say that after they realized what the state organization meant to them that there would be little trouble in enrolling them and that the Milwaukee exhibitor would find them shoulder to shoulder with him fighting their mutual battles.

Before the election of officers and the selection of a name was taken up Mr. Phillips again took the floor and commented very favorably upon The Motion Picture News' editorial on "The Privilege of Being Taxed," and his remarks were heartily seconded by the exhibitors present.

Though the Milwaukee exhibitors outnumbered the state men three to one, but one local man was elected as an officer of the state organization. This was thought by local exhibitors to be the best way to conclusively demonstrate to the state exhibitor that Milwaukee has no desire to control the state organization.

To James R. Sherwood, of the firm of Sherwood & Williams, of Madison, fell the honor of heading the new state organization.

O. R. SHRIEBE, of Plymouth, was elected vice-president. To facilitate the handling of the affairs of the association it was thought best to have the president and the secretary reside in the same town, so R. G. Nuss was elected secretary. In appreciation of his work in handling the funds of the motion picture ball last season, George Fischer was elected treasurer.

William Jacobs, of Milwaukee, was elected sergeant-at-arms. The election of the executive committee was also notable for the scarcity of local men elected to it. Those that will comprise the executive committee are: O. A. Wolke, Lakemills; H. Trinz, Milwaukee; J. T. Larson, Pewaukee; M. Rice, Milwaukee, and W. F. Lobel, Cedarburg. C. H. Phillipps, who has done such splendid work fighting adverse legislation in the past, was elected counsel.

The convention was followed by a banquet in honor of the state exhibitors and toasts were drank to the success of the new organization which has started off so well. J. W. Martin.

Boise Exhibitors Face Local Censorship

Mayor Hodges, However, Declares He Will Not Act Until the Matter Is Carefully Considered—Managers Not Organized

Special to The Motion Picture News

Boise, Idaho, Sept. 22.

THE local censorship craze has struck Boise. Mayor Arthur Hodges has been approached by a number of people who have requested him to appoint a local censorship board to pass upon the pictures secured by the theatres before being shown to the public.

He has taken the matter under advisement and has given out a statement that he is seriously considering the matter and will likely introduce an ordinance providing for a censorship board.

The proprietors of the local motion picture theatres are not organized and consequently will have to fight the proposition single handed, but they are practically all opposed to such a movement to a man.

The pictures shown in the Boise theatres are of high quality, pictures which have been passed by the government censorship board. As no complaint had been heard on any hand by any of the proprietors, the movement proposed by the mayor comes as a distinct surprise.

He has given out that no organization or club as a whole has presented the question to him, but that numerous individuals had brought up the matter and felt that the city should have a board to pass upon the pictures to be exhibited.

He has promised, however, to make a full investigation of the film theatres, talk with patrons and familiarize himself with the censorship question before taking any action.

Inquiry from those thought to be behind such a movement brings out the fact that they have several complaints against the conducting of the business. One is that the poster paper with which the fronts of some of the theatres are pasted are too sensational and should not be permitted to remain up.

A few years ago, J. A. Whitmore, a "boy expert" connected with the Men and Religion Forward movement, spent a week in Boise and took in all the picture shows. Following his investigation he publicly reported that the theatres here were all showing a high class of pictures, much ahead of the average city.

As Boise is situated five hundred miles from the nearest film exchange, the appointment of a censorship board would work a great hardship on motion picture proprietors, for, should they condemn a picture, the house would be obliged to close down until a new film could be obtained, which would require at least two days.

There is some likelihood that the motion picture show proprietors will get together and fight. J. N. Floyd.

Organization Is Trade's Greatest Need, Prominent Exhibitors Everywhere Agree

Milwaukee Managers Declared That the League to Be of Value Must Take Firm Stand on Censorship—Cincinnati Men Say That the Body Must Combat Adverse Legislation to Benefit the Industry—Washington Sees Solution of Poster Problem in Organization—Co-operation Hopeless in Albany

THE problems with which the exhibitor has to cope, from the outside and from the inside, are daily growing more numerous and more perplexing.

They can only be met with organization. The same problems in other businesses have yielded to efficient organization when every other method has failed.

This is generally admitted in the industry. Yet the indifference toward organization is as glaring among hundreds of exhibitors the country over as the need for it.

Why?

THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS has determined to find out the answer. Do the exhibitors who are unaffiliated with any trade body deny the usefulness of any organization? Or is their quarrel with the organizations that now exist?

Why have they never become members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America? In short, What kind of organization do they want, assuming that they want one?

In justice to the league, it is time these things were known. The league, a body of exhibitors and for exhibitors, is entitled to know why those whom it is designed to serve refuse to support it.

And in justice to every exhibitor, it is time the atmosphere was cleared of misunderstandings of grievances, of the "every-one-for - himself - and - the - devil - take - the - hindmost" spirit, and some common ground be revealed upon which all exhibitors can unite for their defense and protection.

This is what THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS will endeavor to do in the campaign that has just commenced.

"To organize or not to organize" is the question that has been squarely put up to the exhibitors of the country.

"Do you believe in organization?"

"Are you organized?"

"If not, why not?"

"What kind of an organization do you want?"

Every exhibitor has something to say on this subject. Every exhibitor who is not a leaguer knows why he is not. The NEWS invites him to speak, here and now.

And incidentally, the NEWS reminds every "free-lance" exhibitor that the league today is an exhibitor's body in which every member has his inalienable rights and privileges, if it never was so before. It is a body for all the exhibitors all the time.

Join it and help to make it what you want such an organization to be.

The first of the exhibitor opinions are herewith submitted for the benefit of all concerned. Others will follow until the country has been canvassed, and the sentiment of the exhibitors clarified.

Some of the communications received by THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS contain frank criticisms of organization movements under way, though they favor an association.

President Pearce, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, has sent the following letter to every local branch officer in the country. The question touches every exhibitor, in or out the League. Every exhibitor in or out of the League should read it and act upon it, and it should set every exhibitor thinking upon the value of organization.

THE MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

Office of the President,
Victoria Theatre Building,
415 E. Baltimore Street.

Baltimore, Md., Sept. 15, 1914.

Dear Sir: I thought it well to write you at this time regarding the fact that Congress is now considering placing a war tax on amusement tickets. You realize that at the present time the exhibitors have a greater burden than they can bear without this additional taxation.

If you will get in touch with every member possible of your branch and request them to write their representatives at Washington, opposing this taxation in as strong terms as possible, it will be a big help in preventing same from being included in the taxation list.

I have every reason to believe that if this tax is placed upon the moving picture exhibitor it will be a long time before it will be removed, and I cannot urge you too strongly to get every member possible in your State to act on this matter promptly.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) MARION S. PEARCE, President.
M. P. E. L. of America.

Criticizes the League

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Milwaukee, Sept. 22.

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors League has been of little value to film men in the opinion of Manager Harry Graham of the Butterfly theatre, and it will be of little value to the exhibitor outside of giving him an opportunity to exchange ideas with his fellow exhibitor in convention once a year, until the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League takes a firm stand against censorship of any kind, legalized or otherwise, and fights it to a finish.

"Understand me," said Mr. Graham, "I am not blaming the present executive board, as I think it is composed of a splendid set of broad-minded, capable men, far more capable than the executive boards of many other national organizations, and all they need is the incentive of the assurance that they have the backing of all the exhibitors to fight the censorship and various other evils as they should be fought, without compromising.

"I think," said Mr. Graham, "that the majority of exhibitors will agree with me when I say that the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America is making a mistake by even recognizing the National Board of Censorship, as by so doing they do not abolish censorship, but on the contrary give their sanction to citizens' committees which, while they pretend to recognize the National Board, condemn pictures have been passed by the National Board.

"What do I think is the matter with the State League? Why, simply the inability to get the state and small town exhibitor together and interested in the league. Though the meeting to organize the Wisconsin State League was held in this city during State Fair week when the people from all over the state were here, there were but six out of town exhibitors present, if I remember rightly.

"THE only way that a condition like this can be remedied is to educate the small town manager and awaken him to the fact that his interests are his fellow exhibitors' interest, and that until he works for and with his state organization he will be absolutely at the mercy of all grafting politicians and over-zealous and worse reformers.

"I think that matters of importance should be referred to members direct either in person, or by letter, for an executive committee to be of any value must be given a great amount of authority, which authority is very liable to be abused and the committee developed into a despotic power which can do much harm to the league."

Mr. Graham stated that he personally wanted to do everything in his power to co-operate with President Pearce in making the national body a great organization, and while he had no authority to speak for his brother exhibitors in Milwaukee, he thought that Mr. Pearce could depend on their friendship and hearty co-operation.

Only Unity Will Impress Congress

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Washington, D. C., Sept. 22.

LIKE all rising organizations, the District of Columbia Motion Picture Exhibitors League has had its vicissitudes in its few years of existence.

After several attempts to unite the exhibitors, a representative gathering was finally assembled and under Mr. Neff the local league was inaugurated and recognized.

From the very first there was indifference and dissension, but despite these the organization was held intact until Wm. R. Herbst, manager of the Circle theatre, was made president and affairs took on a more promising aspect.

In a tactful manner Mr. Herbst has been able to create more congeniality among the local film men and thereby increase the membership of the league.

At present it comprises about fifty per cent. of the exhibitors, though it should have more than that and it is the desire of the organization to increase its membership.

This is one of the causes of the ball which is being arranged for October 31 and which is taking a very favorable aspect in film circles.

TO ascertain exactly the status of the local exhibitors league, President Herbst was interviewed and he had this to say of the situation:

"The league has and is demonstrating its usefulness to the exhibitor. Questions have arisen as to the propriety of a film, sensational posters, the rights of the theatre owner, fire regulations, etc., and all these have been adjusted through the league as an organized body. The authorities would not have listened to the arguments of an individual.

Those in the league recognize its assistance, and those outside reap the benefits as well. But there are bigger questions coming up before the motion picture exhibitor, questions which will call for strong organization, and it is for this we should prepare ourselves.

"Especially, right here in the District of Columbia should we make ourselves felt, since Congress seems determined to put its fingers in the moving picture game in some form or other. Federal censorship and the war tax are calling our attention this very minute to the needs of unity.

There is no legal reason why the motion picture should be singled out from other amusements for federal interference and is only through united efforts that we can expect to receive recognition in Congress.

"THE financial end of the local league, and the national organization as well, is not what it should be, and it is with the view of increasing our funds that we are giving the big ball on October 31. We hope to increase our membership, too, and to gather means to make necessary strides in which we are hampered at present.

"When I speak of membership, I do not mean mere numbers. I mean men who are representative of the business and who will add to the up-building of the industry; men who will take and feel its responsibility. In this connection, I might add that I am inclined to discourage new exhibitors from coming into the field.

"There are too many in it now of the mushroom or parasitic order, with the resultant mediocre show and ill-kept houses. True, the discriminating public is doing much to weed out the irresponsible exhibitor, but much more weeding is yet to be done. Quality and not quantity is what counts."

The officers of the District of Columbia Motion Picture League are as follows:

President, Wm. P. Herbst; vice-president, V. H. Stonesifer; secretary, Fulton Bralawski; treasurer, Ira LaMott; directors, A. C. Joy, T. M. Eastwood, Joseph Morgan and Harry Carndall.

THEODORE FRANKLIN.

Exhibitors' Views on Organization

"It is hard to get small town exhibitors interested in the League."—Harry Graham, the Butterfly Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis.

"All lines of business are organized, and there is no reason why the film men should not do the same."—L. G. Bissinger, the Queen Theatre, Dallas, Texas.

"Exhibitors must organize because of adverse legislation. As a whole, they have not been fully acquainted with the benefits of the League."—Charles Weigel, the Alhambra Theatre, Cincinnati, Ohio.

"Co-operation is the only way a good organization can serve its members and get results."—R. G. Nuss, the Orton Theatre, Madison, Wis.

"The League has and is demonstrating its usefulness to the exhibitor. But there are big questions coming up before the motion picture exhibitor which will call for strong organization."—William P. Herbst, the Circle Theatre, Washington, D. C.

Exhibitors Must Unite to Get Results

Cincinnati, Sept. 22.

"WITHIN six months the exhibitors in the field will realize that they must organize because of adverse legislation and other conditions which will arise to compel this step," declared Charles Weigel, manager of the Alhambra theatre, West Fifth street, Cincinnati, and Cincinnati's motion picture representative in the local Rotary Club, an organization of representative business men.

Membership in the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America will be intensified best, in the opinion of Mr. Weigel, by giving assurance to each individual exhibitor that certain well defined benefits are to be derived from the organization.

"The exhibitors, as a whole, have not been fully acquainted with the benefits of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America," he said.

"Up to the present time most exhibitors have made money by operating a 'free-lance game.' They have not given this great industry the benefit of any particular study, but they have just jumped into the business, blind-folded, as it were. But now high class business men are entering the field and giving their experience and their best thought to the development of the business.

"COMPETITION, consequently, has arisen on all sides and the easy-going exhibitor finds himself at a disadvantage. Besides this the cost of materials and the cost of operation is constantly becoming greater. Exhibitors can be brought to understand what an organization such as the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America and its local and state branches mean to them and the industry, if

Ohio Convention No Place For a Censor

M. A. Neff, Governor Cox's Secretary, and Two or Three Score of "The Faithful" Rally at Columbus to Endorse Mr. Neff's Censorship Law, but the Resolution Falls Through and a Grievance Committee Is Appointed—Urge Producers to Organize and Suggest Co-operative Exposition

Special to The Motion Picture News.

Columbus, Ohio, Sept. 22.

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Ohio met in convention at the Southern Hotel of this city on September 15 and 16, and while exhibitors came from Cleveland, Dayton, Cincinnati and other cities of Ohio, this array of large cities meant nothing in attendance. Sixty members were present.

Considering that Ohio has more exhibitors than any other three States in the Union, the small representation is significant.

M. A. Neff, glowing with a conscious pride of upholding his pet scheme of state censorship, presided at the opening of the meeting on September 15.

THE conclave was supposed to be held with two purposes in view: to celebrate the origin of the Ohio State league and the national body and to promote the fusion of State exhibitors into one organization which shall be free from dissension and any disturbing element.

M. A. Neff, without declaring that he considered himself within the range of the latter category, though numerous exhibitors felt sure, judging from his previous tenacity in holding office, that his actions deserved such a characterization, condescendingly announced that he would not be a candidate for re-election at the next meeting in Cleveland.

Mr. Neff's self-abnegation made a profound impression on the visitors. Of course, by virtue of his office and his supposed duties toward the public, he aired his views on the censorship question.

These views failed to convince exhibitors who had had disagreeable experiences with the censoring body in its manner of holding up pictures at short notice, preventing managers from obtaining substitutes in time to give the public a full program.

CONSIDERABLE discussion was caused among the exchange men present, whose experiences with the censor board had failed to impress them with any particular advantages to be gained by official meddling in a private business.

Several resolutions were submitted to the members, but the most important offered on September 15 was the following:

"Whereas, it has heretofore been impractical for this league to effectively and satisfactorily confer and deal with the manufacturers with reference to affairs pertaining to their business and interests in common.

"Now, therefore, we suggest that the manufacturers organize for the purpose of negotiating and cooperating with this league and protecting the motion picture industry."

THE significant fact underlying the resolution is that the Ohio league does not favor the designs of the Board of Trade recently organized in New York City.

Another resolution introduced which will have interest for exchange men, producers and the manufacturers of accessories is the following:

"Be it resolved:

"That it is the sense of the M. P. E. L. of Ohio that the place of holding the next national exhibition be consistent with the wishes of the bona fide motion picture manufacturers, who naturally support the same;

"Therefore, we recommend to the national executive board that they confer with such manufacturer and designate a time and place of holding the national exposition, and that the convention of the national league be held at the same time and place. This league considers either New York, Chicago, or Philadelphia more advantageous to the interests of the exhibitor and manufacturer than any other city."

FOLLOWING a banquet, September 15, the sixty delegates present accorded a rising vote of thanks to M. A. Neff. The demonstration was occasioned by the statement made by Neff earlier in the day that he would not again be a candidate for State president, a sentiment that struck a responsive chord in the breasts of all who were not in favor of his views on censorship.

The State body endorsed the national league and pledged its allegiance to the national body and its newly elected presiden, Marion Pearce.

The Tuesday session was principally a social and get-together affair. Addresses were made Tuesday evening, following a banquet and cabaret entertainment, by George F. Burba, secretary to Governor Cox; J. A. Edwards, of Columbus, and C. M. Christienson, of Cleveland, exchange men; Leo Berg, of Dayton, and Edward Cole, of Cleveland, exhibitors; and M. A. Neff.

"I stand for censorship because I know that a certain percentage of the pictures on the market are bad," said Neff, with an air of self-sufficient content. "The percent is very small, but the public must be protected from even a few bad or offensive pictures. I predict that within a year the Ohio censor law will be the most popular law pertaining to motion pictures on the statute books.

"IT hasn't been fairly tried yet. It only went into effect September 1. Up to that time many exhibitors were showing pictures which had been censored and they didn't know it. Perhaps at the time they were complaining of the censors and pointing out that after the censors got busy this sort of picture or that could not be shown.

"The principal reason I favor state censorship is because it eliminates a local censorship," he continued, importantly, with touching thoughtfulness for exhibitors. "Without a state board every city and village would have ordinances creating local boards. An exhibitor would never know when his theatre could be opened. He'd have to consult the ministers' union, the ladies' aid societies and the constables before he could exhibit his pictures."

Neff favors a national congress of censors, not self-constituted, but legally created. He said such a plan would reduce the cost of reviewing to ten cents a picture.

Mr. Burba, a good statesman looking after his political fences, the Governor's secretary, said that Governor Cox was the best friend the motion picture industry of the State of Ohio ever had. He told why Cox, who of course would never think of using the censor offices as berths for politicians, advocated the state censor board.

"WHEN he first came into office," he said, "his most frequent callers, it seems to me, aside from job hunters, and a good portion of his mail, came from towns over the State which were agitating local censor boards. Many of the letters were written by men who aspired to become the local censors, some were written by civic and welfare organizations and some by the municipal officials."

This was followed by a pleasant tribute to the wisdom of the Ohio boss.

"Finally it was suggested to him that a state board would eliminate such a confusion as seemed to exist. He called in experts, among them Mr. Neff. The bill was outlined and drawn. It was in committee for weeks. Every man in the business had time to consider it and to suggest changes. It passed.

"And I'll venture to say that in one year after the time it is repealed, if such a thing should happen, every town in Ohio with a population of more than 3,000 would have its local board."

RESOLUTIONS were adopted which were to be submitted to manufacturers and producers of films, requesting them to effect some sort of an organization and to appoint committees to arbitrate matters that may be in dispute between themselves and the exhibitors.

The new president of the Exhibitors' League of America, Marion Pearce, of Baltimore, delivered an address Wednesday afternoon. He touched only briefly on the censorship proposition and expressed a hope that the Ohio league and the national organization might work in harmony.

Lem S. Miller, general counsel for the league, explained that the difference concerning censorship that had existed between the national organization and the state league was being adjusted with entire satisfaction to both.

H. E. VESTAL, who by virtue of his position as chairman of the Ohio Censor Board, could be depended upon to speak in favor of the board, expressed the board's ostensible purpose not to be antagonistic to the league, but as a necessary (?) and proper (?) adjunct to the exhibition of wholesome pictures.

On the question of censorship it was decided that it would be fairer to both friends and opposers of the Ohio censor law to postpone definite action as regards censorship until the regular annual convention to be held in Cleveland next March.

By that time, it was argued, the law will have been in effect long enough to fairly discuss its merits, if any, and its shortcomings.

Sam Bullock, whose canvass last spring showed that out of five hundred Ohio exhibitors only five were in favor of state censorship, spoke against the arbitrary powers placed in the hands of the censor board.

THE sixty visiting exhibitors, who represent so small a majority of the great body of motion picture managers in Ohio, and with the exception of four or five had, under the dominating influence of Neff, expressed earlier in the convention sentiments in favor of censorship, listened with interest to Mr. Bullock's condemnation of the Censors.

A great deal of dissatisfaction was expressed on the part of the film men concerning the manner in which Mrs. Maude Murry Miller, of the censor board, discharged the duty of her office.

The Warner's Feature Company, of Cleveland; the Edward Zettler Company, of Dayton, and the Mutual Company representatives declared that Mrs. Miller had discriminated against their pictures. Mrs. Miller did not attend any sessions of the convention.

THE complaints against Mrs. Miller by these three companies were the prime cause of the appointment of a grievance committee, of which J. A. Maddox, former censor, now manager of the Majestic theatre here; Dr. H. J. Alexander, of Dayton; M. R. Huber, of Findlay, and M. A. Neff, president of the state league, were named members.

Exchange Man Complains of Censors' Attitude

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Columbus, O., Sept. 22.

FOR the first time in the history of the organization the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Ohio listened to an exchange man who had the nerve to ask them to consider the exchange man's troubles with censors, when A. M. Muller, manager of Warner's Features, Cincinnati, attended the reunion meeting of the State league, celebrating its fifth anniversary in Columbus Tuesday and Wednesday, September 15 and 16.

As the result of Mr. Muller's "live-wire" talk, backed up by addresses of other exchange men who attended the sessions, the league established a grievance committee, which will take up the grievances of the exchanges against the State Censor Board.

Incidentally, Messrs. Vestal and Wilson, two of the members of the Censor Board, attended the sessions and heard Mr. Muller's talk.

The result of this was a better understanding between feature men and the censors.

THE chief complaint made by Mr. Muller was that the board refused to give any information to the exchange men or manufacturers as to the reasons for which certain films have been rejected. He declared there was nothing in the law that justified this refusal.

"The manufacturers are not antagonistic to this law," he said. "They are willing to do their part. They do not want to make films that are objectionable.

"But if you are not going to tell them wherein rejected films have been objectionable, how are you to expect them to guard against making the same mistakes over again?"

Mr. Vestal and Mr. Wilson promised later that the reasons would be given on request by the exchanges or the manufacturers.

Promises were also made by the censors to review certain features which had been rejected without apparent reason as understood by the exchange men.

Other film manufacturers were represented at the meeting by Mr. Christianson, of the Mutual Corporation in Cleveland; H. Charnes, Warner's Features, Cleveland; and Edwards and Zettler of Columbus.

THE exhibitors were told that the Mutual had had more than fifty films rejected and Warner's more than thirty recently.

Other grievances were laid before the meeting and President Neff considered a motion to establish the grievance committee to work in conjunction with the censor board on complaints of the manufacturers and exchange men.

On the passage of the motion, he appointed Dr. Alexander, of Dayton, and Mr. Maddux, of Columbus, to act with the president as the members of this committee. All grievances are to be filed with this committee and will be taken up by the members with the censors.

President Neff informed the exhibitors that the Industrial Commission had given the censor board permission to buy another machine and to employ another operator so that there will be two machines in use.

The league then went on record as endorsing Messrs. Vestal and Wilson as members of the censor board.

They did not, however, endorse Mrs. Maude Murray Miller, the third member.

IT was the opinion of the exhibitors that Mrs. Miller was considered an unfavorable censor and the request was made that the grievance committee confer with Governor Cox in an effort to have her removed from the board on the ground that her work as a censor is unsatisfactory because, it is alleged, she is prejudiced against certain companies and films. Success With Local Features in Costa Rica

By Amando Cespedes Marin

How a Latin Photographer Shows Yankee Energy in the Land of Manana by Filming a Neighborhood Piscatorial and Putting It on Exhibition in Forty-eight Hours, Establishing a Record for Central American Camera Work

IT was some time in May, 1913, that I thought that a motion picture camera could be made the means of a profitable little business in this country, and I decided to have one.

I wrote to several camera manufacturers in the United States and Europe, inquiring about complete outfits, because I failed to see advertisements concerning same.

Four weeks after, a concern in New York stated and explained about a camera, and offered to ship one on the receipt of $260. Having got no reply from Europe, I sent the check, believing that within four weeks more my camera and films would reach me.

Thus, the mail left for the United States and one week later I got from the same concern a catalogue. I pored over every night the catalogue, and made up my mind to have a cabinet maker make me a developing outfit.

AS to the measurements. I took a fifty-foot ribbon and wound it around a 22-inch frame, and found out how many times the ribbon went around it. But I did not know the width of the film. Next day I got a letter (Lumiere, Jougl and Co. of New York) that contained a sample piece of film, a positive made with a camera like the one I had already ordered. I was delighted to think I was going to be the first one to make cinematographic films in Central America.

Thus, I found that a frame 22 by 30 inches could hold 50 feet of new film. And I made a drawing of the outfit, imitating one in the catalogue (Heinrich Ernemann, A. G. Dresden, sent by The Meyer Camera and Instrument Co., of 18 West Twenty-seventh street, New York), but of course dispensing with the developing dish or developing drum, which did not suit my ideas, as I wanted tanks.

And I wanted tanks because I thought of saving the developer and working a little faster, having several frames to hold the films.

Then I went to the cabinet maker and told him to make a frame 22 inches wide and 30 inches in length, outside measure, but having one inch extra on the 22 inch side.

Thus there was a frame 32 by 24 like the photograph of the developing outfit. I ordered eight frames made from cedar lumber, with a hole in the center of the 24-inch wood to be held by the revolving frame.

THEN I took the developing frames to a tin man and had him make two tin cases wide enough to hold one inch apart from each frame, two of them wooden frames. Thus the tin cases measured within 32 inches in length, 4½ inches wide and 25 inches deep.

I ordered two tin cases of that measure and one extra, seven inches wide, to hold four frames.

When the tin man gave me the cases I went to the carpenter and ordered him to make special wooden boxes to cover the tin cases exactly.

I got a letter from Mr. Meyer stating that he had ordered the outfit direct from Germany, to be shipped from there to me, thus saving me the United States duty. I was discouraged.

I had to wait one month more for the mails from the tropics to Europe through the coasting steamers, which take one month each way.

I was discouraged, because, if the outfit did not arrive before the 11th of October, I would lose a fine chance to make money, as there was then taking place a big celebration in San José, the Eucharistic Congress.

All September passed and the first days of October came, and my outfit was not at hand, and I did not know anything about making motion pictures.

I WAS living in Heredia, seven miles from San José. The church directors were writing me for a film to present to Pope Pius X, and I could not take the order, fearing to disappoint them, either by not receiving the goods or by not doing the work properly.

Then on the 7th of October I got a letter from Dresden, enclosing a parcel post receipt and the regular custom house papers. I told my wife that next morning I would go to Port Limon, 125 miles from Heredia, to get my goods personally. And I could not sleep that night, thinking about the camera.

Previous to the letter from Germany I had received one thousand feet each of positive and negative in two hundred feet rolls in tin cases. The film had arrived, of course, but the outfit did not. I had also received the developer, and I was ready to make my solutions, for I had had the tanks two months.

I took the trip to Port Limon and at San José a friend, a photographer, a keen young man, inquired where I was going, and said that he intended to go to Port Limon, too.

He told me that he had some collections to make there and wanted to see about some deliveries. I told him that I was going to meet the steamer that was bringing the cinematographic outfit and that I would do my best to take the Congress and make a one thousand foot film, the first of its kind in Costa Rica. He was kind of surprised. We spoke all the way about motion picture films and the business generally. But as he is an unusually proficient amateur, I hesitated to tell him all I knew.

THUS we arrived at Limon and took a room in a hotel, and when we were having dinner he almost knocked me down when he said that he also had come to Limon to receive a complete film taking and projecting outfit, and that we both could help each other. All my plans seemed to be knocked into a cocked hat.

Next morning we got up early and went to the custom house. The steamer had arrived in the evening and the cargo was at the dock. We did all we could to find our shipment, and glad we were to find it among three or four thousand boxes.

The train was leaving for San José at ten in the morning, and we managed to pay the custom duties and free ourselves from the custom house red tape.

He showed me the boxes, nine big ones, weighing about a ton. In fact, a complete outfit of the finest kind. My outfit weighed only forty pounds.

He gave to a railroad agent the rest of the boxes and took the camera, tripod and four 90-foot film rolls; for he wanted also to film the big festivity. His camera, a fine one of English make, had a ninety-foot capacity, with everything for regular stage work. His tripod was a solid one of sixty pounds weight; his films were ninety feet in length. His carrying cases all leather, key locked.

I CONTEMPLATED his camera outfit. I did not want him to see mine at all, for really it was inferior in price and in quality, and as we wanted to get to the train, we had no time to look at my poor little things.

On the train he showed me all the list of goods that came to him. I must tell you of them because it is an interesting part of how I learned to make motion pictures.

The outfit consisted of: The camera, tripod, carrying cases and films, and a perfect Williamson printer with electric motor and lamp, which cost as much as the complete camera, $300 each.

There was some developing equipment and chemicals, and a complete motion picture projector and other paraphernalia. The outfit complete cost 7,000 marks; mind you, seven thousand marks, for he brought fifteen thousand feet of positive and negative stock film; almost two thousand dollars of those brilliant coins that you work hard to get, which, if compared with my two hundred and sixty dollar outfit, you will laugh at, thinking that I could not compete with my outfit.

We were going up the summit of the mountains in our serpent-like railway, following at times the big River Reventazon, passing through tunnels, and admiring the volcanic mountains and the banana farms, the coffee lands and the typical Spanish cities, and passing through within the seven hours trip all the temperatures from sea level to a five thousand foot altitude, when the San José terminal was at our feet.

The young man took his goods and left me, for I had to ride seven miles yet to get home.

ON the train my friendly competitor asked "how to do this and that, or so and so," but I kept my own counsel.

Finally I got home. My wife and child were waiting for me with anxiety. I said nothing of my vexation, but told them that my friend the young amateur photographer had a beautiful outfit, and that I was not disposed to film the festivities because I had to learn how to use the outfit. I had to pay cash and my competitor had all goods come to him on one year's credit.

I was discouraged.

But my wife said that I was a conscientious photographer, a well known artist and that the other fellow was an amateur with more or less luck. At last I agreed to take some pictures as a sort of tryout.

Two small wooden boxes, weighing twenty pounds each, stood on the floor.

I WAS looking at them while my father opened them. He took out a canvas case containing a yellow opical finished camera. The other box contained a film slide, carrying case, canvas made, with four film boxes; a handle for the camera, panoramic camera top, a bottle of film cement and a film repairer. That was all the equipment.

By mail that evening I got a letter stating that the tripod legs had been sent by parcel post.

Again I was disappointed. Next day was Saturday, and parcel posts are not delivered on Saturdays. My wife said not to be discouraged and after dinner to call up the carpenter by phone and give him the measurement for a tripod and to fix it anyway to the tripod head. "You will see that your picture will come over as fine as the foreign ones," she said.

The carpented came, and I asked him if he could furnish me with three special legs about eighty inches high to fit my camera top. He did not hesitate, and offered to bring them, roughly made though, before ten o'clock that night.

While the carpenter went to work I examined the camera and put in an old film that was sent with it and ran the movement to watch the "claw" system and the shutter and the intermittent movement, the speed. I worked the film back and forth about fifty times.

I could do nothing but load the camera with a negative film and take the pictures.

THE tripod came, it fitted fine, and all was ready when I noted that the dial to measure how many meters of film used did not work.

I found out next morning that the tooth wheel of the measuring instrument was broken and that it could not work unless a new one was put in. I made up my mind to work the machine by watch time as I knew that 200 feet may pass through the gate during four minutes.

I loaded the film boxes, four of them, leaving one for titles, which was another matter to learn, and asked my father to walk down by the river bridge on the railroad and wait there for one of the Congress trains, so that a fifty-foot piece of film would add to my festivity film.

And so we did. Some friends and neighbors walked with us, following the railway track, and by half past one under nice sunlight the train approached.

I had my watch ready, the handle on the machine, the lens stoped to 1/16 and focussed with the fixed focus lens to 100 feet. I began to run the handle according to the german instructions.

WELL, the first fifty feet of film was taken and I returned home. That night after preparing the developer and fixer, I followed the instructions and the result was an excellent negative which gave me courage to start the next day, the very Sunday of the Eucharistic congress festivity.

We arrived at San José very early Sunday morning, and a boy carried the tripod and a chair. I carried the camera. I took all the events from the principal points of the procession, arches, altars, meetings, bands. But the arrival of the big procession at the cathedral was the big part of the picture. Thus we selected a fine location, and waited till the end of the ceremony began. But I could not take it, because I turned the handle backwards, and, of course, the film tightened up and tore within the dark box. Anyway, I had a good time during the whole day, and did not hesitate in turning the handle as easy as turning the projector handle.

I must say, that my fellow competitor turned loose, taking everything any old way, without paying attention to the interesting parts or to the artistic side of the affair.

I was sure to get fine results, and after two p. m. decided to return to Heredia. Previously, I went to the principle show house in San José and made arrangements to exhibit the same film, if good, on the following Tuesday.

As soon as we arrived home at 5 p. m. I made ready all the solutions and developed three rolls of film in six hours. My tanks only could develop one hundred feet at a time.

THAT very night I wired the theatre in San José that the negative was in perfect condition, and that next Monday I would undertake the printing.

Monday morning came. The film I washed and left in the wooden frames to let them dry. I began to join the negative learning carefully and thinking about the printing of it the same that night. I was all day putting it in order and cleaning the surface of the celluloid.

The evening came and I made my machine ready to print, for the camera is a printer too, and I printed 600 feet, step by step, on front of an incandescent light, without having tried its developing.

I was printing the last part when a wire came, wishing me success and letting me know that all papers carried advertising and that big posters were ordered and that all handbills were carrying the announcement of my film to be shown in San José.

I went to work hard, my developing solution was the same developer for the negative, and my wooden frames were the same used previously.

I BEGAN to develop, and all the film was finely printed. The camera did not trouble me any, for I was using it just as if I was a professional at film making.

Teaching the Exhibitor Co-operation

By Albert C. Sproul

The second chapter of "How An Exchange Man Won His Exhibitors"—A four page bulletin began it; "Get-together" meetings followed; co-operation succeeded cut-throat competition; the exhibitors organized under Jensen selected an efficiency promoter and a music reviewer—Results were instantaneous.

WITH the entering wedge well driven in, Jensen proceeded to extend his lines. The anonymous talks on exhibiting which he had sent each week to the different managers in his locality were followed by a four-page issue with the exchange as the acknowledged headquarters.

The weekly bulletin contained so many practical suggestions that it was looked forward to by the various heads, especially by those who had learned from past experience to put faith in Jensen's innovations.

Most of the hints, to be sure, definitely dealt with the exchange's program; but they were in many cases broad enough to be applied to almost every phase of the business.

The department, "Talks by Managers," was the first stimulus to co-operative action.

Jensen was considerable of a philosopher. He realized that the surest way of securing a man's friendship was to place oneself under an obligation to him.

It is a recognized fact that when one does a favor for another, one is likely to feel kindly toward the recipient.

BRINGING the same idea over to his undertaking, he felt that once he could get the managers of his section talking freely, imparting money-making ideas which they had gleaned from actual experience, he would gain everything for which he strove.

By starting the afore-mentioned department he gave them an opportunity to meet one another half-way.

It was like pulling teeth to get them started. Jealousy and suspicion were still rife. One exhibitor looked askance at another and felt all but fraternal.

From obscure hints, however, which Jensen had wheedled out of the more pliant, the talks gradually grew in importance. Jensen legitimately played upon the vanity of the exhibitors and encouraged each customer to prove himself every whit as smart as the others.

There was nothing mean in the spirit with which it was done. If anything crept in that threatened to destroy the friendly overtures, Jensen was ready to censor it.

When things had proceeded far enough so that Jensen felt safe in bringing the various exhibitors together, he invited them, at the exchange's expense, to a banquet held at one of the hotels in the vicinity.

Practically every one whom he had so carefully coached in the past was present. And the representation from the later converts was liberal.

Jensen was entirely satisfied with the showing, and felt that he was working along the right lines.

THIS meeting, opened in such a convivial fashion, proved to be a tremendously important impetus to co-operative action.

Although Jensen was at first rather reticent at allowing business to obtrude itself upon the assembly, the exhibitors, nevertheless, took matters in their own hands and suggested things that Jensen would not have dared to hint at.

When Weller, manager of "The Unique," found the manager of "The Pastime" on one side and the manager of "The Beacon" on the other, and discovered that they were not the rapacious commercial buccaneers that he had considered them, but rather good fellows, the reaction was so great that he was willing to commit himself to any philanthropic undertaking.

Many other exhibitors made the very same discovery, all of which was of great help.

The first thing that the managers decided to do was to stop the cut-throat competition that had threatened their very existence.

They determined to pattern their future relations after the associations in other fields, where wholesalers and retailers had come together, and had, with complete amity, agreed to work along mutually beneficial lines. The public, until then the only gainer by the assinine methods of the managers, was unappreciative.

The low admission fees and extended programs had both cheapened the theatres and sated the patrons.

The exhibitors, therefore, pledged themselves to work for the benefit of the industry as a whole.

A committee was appointed to draw up a set of by-laws to govern the future actions of the managers. Jensen was unanimously chosen to head it, after a rising vote of thanks had been extended to him for his efforts in their behalf.

One and all agreed to support the exchange. They designated the weekly bulletin, which Jensen issued, their official organ, and at Jensen's invitation made the exchange their official headquarters. All this was accomplished before the exhibitors disbanded.

THE decision of the managers gave Jensen, as the head of the committee, considerable power. It placed in his hands the authority he needed to project his ideas.

The first took the form of a syndicate sheet.

It was intended to hold the patronage of the loyal theatres, just as the purpose of the bulletin was to cement the exhibitors to the exchange. It consisted of four pages, dealing mainly with the program that Jensen furnished, written in such a way as to appeal to the average motion-picture fan.

The cuts for each issue were furnished by the manufacturers, and most of the reading matter was built about them. The names of the characters were giving with current bits of gossip, describing their hobbies, narrow escapes, and so on. All served to whet the public interest.

Great care was taken with the printing of this issue. A good coated stock was used, and the front page contained an ornamental heading designed especially for that purpose. The names of the theatre and the manager were printed in a mortised space.

Jensen had entire charge of the paper. Each theatre that was connected with his exchange contributed a certain amount weekly and received in return a certain number of copies of the miniature photoplay magazine. Only the loyal theatres were privileged to distribute the several issues.

ONE can readily realize what a tremendous number of copies were required to fill the demand, which made each comparatively inexpensive. The fact that they contained material such as one would find in the best photoplay magazine was in itself sufficient to recommend them to the public.

But Jensen was not satisfied with that. He realized that there had to be a strong incentive behind them before they would exert the maximum pulling power.

Therefore, he started a series of novel competitions, of which the following is an example.

As each issue treated of the programs of the following week, Jensen would review a scene of a certain photoplay quite at length, without giving any idea, however, what the

Chicago Exhibitors Protest Extra Charges

Will Complain to General Film Company Over Rental on Lubin Serial and Others—Exchange Manager Van Ronkle Explains the Situation

Special to The Motion Picture News

Chicago, Sept. 23.

FOURTEEN of Chicago's exhibitors who are using the General Film Company program have combined for the purpose, as they claim, of gaining proper recognition from the local offices of the General Film Company. It is asserted that these fourteen exhibitors represent $3,000 worth of business weekly in the General Film exchanges. Before taking any drastic steps, however, they intend to augment their force to represent $10,000 worth of weekly business.

Sidney Smith, one of the fourteen, remarked:

"We intend to increase our number until we represent $10,000 worth of business turned into the General Film Company offices each week, before we present our demands. We already have $3,000 worth of bookings pledged to cancel if we do not receive the proper recognition and better treatment.

"Our service is being raised for no apparent reason, outside of the fact that the exchange may have to put on an additional expense by buying another picture. Pictures which should be in the regular service are secured only by paying an extra rental charge over our weekly rental price.

"I refer especially to the Lubin serial, one reel of which is put out each week. An exhibitor of Chicago has a letter from Lubin, stating that this reel was to be put in the regular service at no additional charge.

"The multiple reels released on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, are extra charge pictures, too. The five or six other multiple reels released during the week go into the regular service. New customers in many instances receive their service for less than the old.

"This, we feel, is an unfair condition and we intend to fight it."

Mr. Van Ronkle, who is in charge of the local offices of the General Film Company, in reply to this, said:

"The service of these people was raised only in those instances where we were compelled to purchase extra reels at their request.

"It is impossible for an exchange to spend $110 for a reel and get only a few bookings on it and put it in the regular service. We are willing to accommodate them with any picture they want, but if we cannot secure enough bookings on it to put it in the regular service, we must of necessity place an extra charge on it, or we would be operating our exchanges at a loss as thousands of requests are made on us each week.

"We are willing to include the Lubin serial picture in our regular service to those exhibitors who run the General Film program exclusively. This picture has been given a good deal of advertising and we feel that our regular patrons should be given first opportunity to run it. It would not be fair treatment to them if we were to let it out at no extra charge to their competitor who continually runs a mixed program.

"Our books will show that the new customer invariably pays a higher rental than the man who has been dealing with us for some time."

The names of the fourteen theatres were not given out. They must include several first run houses to represent $3,000. This would average each picture house's weekly rental at a little over $200.

Keystone Exhibitors Will Fight Bosses

Uniontown Meeting Will Launch Organization Designed to Protect the Managers Against Politician Legislation—Herrington Will Lead Session

Special to The Motion Picture News

Pittsburgh, Pa, Sept. 23.

SUNDAY, September 24, has been selected as the day for the formation of the exhibitors' organization at Uniontown, Pa., and some of the Pittsburgh exhibitors are going to Uniontown for the event. The Pittsburgh exhibitors are asked to attend the meeting and lend their assistance in getting the infant organization under way with flying colors and it is expected that a special train will go from here to lend a hand.

The Imp Theatre at Uniontown has been selected as the meeting place and the gathering will be called to order at 2:30 o'clock. Fred J. Herrington, organizer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, will be present and explain the advantages of such an organization.

The idea of getting together in an organization at this time is stronger than it otherwise would be on account of the two questions of vital importance to all exhibitors in the State that are to come up at the next session of the State Legislature, the censorship matter and the new State building code.

Either one of these matters, if they go through, will put many of the smaller exhibitors in the State out of commission and they have to be fought by men who understand the situation.

Herrington is to explain the matter to the men at the meeting Sunday and make the matter clear in all its details so that a better get-together spirit will prevail and the exhibitors of that section understand that they must fight with the other organizations if they are to accomplish anything at the next State Legislative session. This is certainly an instance demonstrating the necessity of strong organization among exhibitors.

Individual efforts will be wasted at the State House, as it seems to be the idea of the bosses that by the putting through the new laws they will be better able to find soft jobs for their followers.

It is with this idea in view that a battle will be fought in order to get the legislation passed and signed by the Governor so that the jobs can be handed out and the Pennsylvania State machine strengthened at the exhibitors' expense.

HUMPHREY INJURED IN AUTO ACCIDENT

William Humphrey of the Vitagraph players and the producing staff, was injured in an automobile accident at Asbury Park, N. J., on Sunday, September 6. Mrs. Humphrey, who accompanied him with his niece, Carrie Bertsch, was very seriously injured.

She had three ribs broken, and suffered other internal injuries. Miss Bertsch escaped without injury. Their machine skidded on the road running along the shore, and turned turtle from the roadway on to the sandy beach. Mr. and Mrs. Humphrey were caught underneath the machine.

HORSLEY JOINS GENERAL FILM COMPANY

Centaur the First Concern to Have Brands Added to the Program of the Exchange Since the Formation of the Big Releasing Organization—Bright Galaxy of Stars in Pictures Brought Out by the Bayonne Producer

DAVID HORSLEY has been taken into the licensed fold, and, for the first time in the history of the General Film Company a new brand of film has been added to the regular program of that organization.

Ever since the formation of the Motion Picture Patents Company in 1908, efforts have been made by the powers of the film world, both in and out of the company, to add to the list of licensed manufacturers.

But in spite of the great pressure that has so frequently been brought to bear, the original ten manufacturers held intact, and the line-up remained unchanged until the present year.

Quite recently Pathé Freres severed its relations with the General Film Company, and it is in effect to fill this void that another manufacturer has been taken in.

THE fact that David Horsley has been chosen for this place, which has been sought by many manufacturers in the motion picture industry, is a distinct and signal tribute to his talents.

Mr. Horsley was the first independent manufacturer in America, it is claimed. His struggle from a meagre beginning, his steady advance through the successive trying conditions of the fast-growing industry and final triumph as the possessor of the largest commercial plant in America and admission to the General Film program of his productions, makes him loom large in a line of endeavor the records of which, in their rapid developments, are replete with signal achievement and remarkable men.

For the present Mr. Horsley will release three one-reel comedies a week. These comedies will be known under the new brand name of Ace and will probably be procurable from the various offices of the General Film Company about the middle of October, although no definite date has yet been set.

The productions will, for the next three months, be made in the Centaur studios at Bayonne. Later, as the winter sets in, two companies will be sent to California, probably near Los Angeles, where Mr. Horsley is considering the erection of a new studio. At least two companies will, in any event, continue to work in the Bayonne studios all winter.

O. W. BIARMER, who was Mr. Horsley's aide in his negotiations with the General Film Company, has been rewarded by an appointment as general sales manager of the Centaur Film Company.

Milton H. Fahrney continues as director-in-chief. Mr. Fahrney's comedies are said to be the finest works that this consistent and long experienced director has ever accomplished.

Tommie Mullens is directing a new style of slapstick comedy of high promise. Two other directors of special selection for a demonstrated ability to produce laugh-makers—one for cartoon and the other for "polite" comedies—are hard at work and their names are being withheld from publicatio1 to aid Mr. Horsley in springing a surprise when the releases are made.

The acting forces include such accepted performers as Mlle. Valkyrien, the Danish star, who is among the popular film actresses of Europe, Nettie Noges, another star of international repute, who has occupied a position in Russia comparable to that of Mary Pickford or Blanche Sweet in this country, and Elaine Ivans, who heads the native contingent. In this beautiful and talented young Miss—she has just turned eighteen—Mr. Horsley expects to develop an American favorite who will outrank the winners of present day popularity contests.

HARRY LA PEARL, many years producing clown of the Barnum and Bailey and Ringling circuses, and recognized as the greatest American pantomimist, and ten other leading clowns are under contract with the company.

Chester Beecroft, advertising and publicity manager of the Motion Picture Patents Company, who until recently occupied the same position with the General Film Company, is also associated with Mr. Horsley in a general capacity of broad scope.

Big things are expected of the Ace comedies, and their appearance on the General Film program will be watched with eager interest.

It might be added in conclusion that David Horsley is one of the best liked and most highly respected men in the film game. During all the years of competition and strife he has so conducted his affairs as to retain the regard of his associates and competitors.

HE has become noted for his geniality and fairness, and the calm, even temper with which he has fronted the most aggravating and violent conditions. It is safe to say that there is no one in the whole motion picture industry whose good fortune would be more happily acclaimed by the rank and file, magnates and trailers, than David Horsley. Hundreds of telegrams bearing congratulations and good will from all over the country have already been piled up on Mr. Horsley's desk.

Weather Brings Higher Prices in Syracuse

Eckel Theatre Raises Evening Admission to Twenty-Five Cents and Holds the Crowds—Musical Union Boosts Salaries

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Syracuse, Sept. 23.

WITH the cool weather as a stimulus, many houses in Syracuse have decided to change policy for the uplift of motion pictures and an increase at the gate.

The Eckel Theatre, one of the biggest and most costly downtown houses, has booked the Paramount program for exclusive showing, and has boosted prices to ten cents for matinees and a ten cent minimum and twenty-five cent limit in the evening. They began with Dustin Farnum in "The Virginian," and have been holding the crowds out.

The new Regent Theatre, a Mark Brock enterprise, opened on Saturday with Dustin Farnum in "The Littlest Rebel" at a straight ten cent admission, and capacity houses are the rule at every performance.

"Cabiria" showed for an entire week at the Empire Theatre, and did a big business with prices ranging from fifteen cents upwards to seventy-five. This week the house is showing "Annette Kellerman" at twenty-five cents to all parts of the house, and is playing to big business both matinee and night.

So successful has the picture proposition been with this "legit" house they have eight solid weeks of picture booking ahead.

The Crescent Theatre is still running a straight General Film program without additional features, and is commanding ten cents downstairs and five cents up. William A. V. Mack, formerly manager of the Feerless Feature Film Company, recently took the management of the Crescent.

Bob Simpson, "The College Man," opens his big new theatre at 711 Crouse avenue, and it remains to be seen just what effect it will have on the new Regent, which is three blocks down the hill. The Simpson Theatre will charge five cents straight while the Regent has inaugurated a ten cent straight price.

The local musicians' union have boosted the prices on the motion picture houses with the result that every house employing an orchestra has either dropped one or two pieces or shortened the hours. Leaders now receive $23, and the balance $18 each per week.

JACKIE SAUNDERS CAST FOR SIX PLAYS

Jackie Saunders, the little leading lady of the Balboa Company, will be featured in six productions by The Box Office Attraction Company during the next five months. Miss Saunders made her first screen success in the Universal Studios of California, and she is now firmly established with film patrons all over the country.

In "The Will o' The Wisp" Miss Saunders acted her part amid a genuine raging flood in southern California, and her daring is a feature in this picture.

Other box office attractions releases in which Miss Saunders is featured are: "Little Sunbeam," "The Square Triangle," "Rose of the Alley," "The Hunchback of Cedar Lodge," and the sixth production, now completed, entitled "Little Jack," will see her playing a part in boy's clothes.

This fall Miss Saunders will be seen in person in theatres in and nearby where she has appeared on the screen. Her tour is arranged by The Box Office Attraction Company.

WAR LOBBY FRAMES DRAW CROWDS

Special to The Motion Picture News

Kansas City, Sept. 22.

The scarcity of pictures pertaining to the European war has been met, in a degree, by the lobby exhibits of several of the Kansas City theatres.

Actual photographs, supplied by the press associations and photographic corporations, are shown in frames outside the house entrance. Any number of such prints have been obtained easily, and will always attract crowds.

And from the crowds gathered before the house, the box-office always can be expected to reap its reward.

Quebec Censors Cut 6,000 Feet a Day

Very Few Films Escape—Even Condemn Some of Dickens' Stories—Board Prompt in Advising the Public of Its Action

Special to The Motion Picture News

Montreal, Sept. 23.

THE Quebec Board of Censors has been on the rampage again. It seems to take periodic slaughtering fits, and when this happens nothing escapes it.

There is peaceful sailing for a week or so, and the exchange managers are even seen to smile. Then the black week comes along, and the smile is gone.

The censors seem to take a positive delight in announcing to the public how many feet of film they condemn during the week. They evidently think that it is the number of feet killed that justifies their existence, and is a correct evidence of their intelligence as censors, rather than a liberal judgment of what the public should see and what they should not.

Thus, we find that in a recent week the censors rejected a daily average of over 6,000 feet, while on one day over 10,000 feet were killed. "See how we earn our pay," say the censors.

But what about the poor exhibitor and the exchange? What the censors do fail to inform the public about is the nature of the films condemned, except in some cases of the obvious fake nature. They do not say that classics go under the heel, just as freely as fakes, that a picture is approved one day, and then recalled on the exhibitor a few days after.

They do not say that the best way of getting a picture past them is to put it through Ontario first, and then when it bears the Ontario approval it generally gets theirs.

There is no redress for the film exchange. No final court to appeal to unless he can get the board to change its opinion, which, absurd as it may seem, it has been known to do. Even some of Dickens' classics have been almost shipwrecked, and only saved at the eleventh hour by heroic appeals.

The latest film to be killed is "Germania," some five thousand feet in length. This in a way is only to be expected.

There is no doubt that things are getting to a very bad state so far as censorship in Quebec is concerned. In my opinion the only remedy is for the exchange men to get together and to cut out Quebec altogether. It would be costly, but it would be effective.

Then the exhibitors would get together and by forcing the newspapers to ventilate the matter, get the public to understand how the censors are killing their amusement. This is the only way to bring the thing to a definite conclusion.

Cincinnati Exercises Strict Censorship

Enforcing the Law in Letter and Spirit—Delay of the Board Holds Back Leaders of Approved Films

Special to The Motion Picture News

Cincinnati, O., Sept. 22.

THE Ohio state censorship law is being enforced in Cincinnati by the police. On Wednesday Chief of Police Copelan notified all motion picture exhibitors in the city that the police department stood ready to enforce to the letter the law compelling the censoring of all films shown in Ohio.

The enforcement of the law, he pointed out, meant that each film displayed on any Cincinnati screen must bear the leader furnished by the state board of censors. Plain clothes men were sent out to "have a look" at all the films, not to speak of the policemen on the various beats.

It looked very blue indeed for the exhibitor, especially the owners of the big, downtown theatres which book only first releases, owing to the fact that the state board seems to be overworked to such an extent that leaders for censored films have not been reaching Cincinnati on scheduled time.

Films booked by these first-class houses seemed doomed to be held back or substituted by something which had had a run or two.

Several of the most prominent exhibitors, however, called the attention of the chief to the fact that their business would be seriously affected if the police were to carry out the enforcement of the law to this extreme.

They explained that they did not wish to show films that had not been censored, but on many occasions were unable to secure the leaders for which they had already paid in time to show approved films in their theatres.

They also told of the plan under which they had been working; that of flashing a slide before and after the approved reel, giving the censor board's file number for it and stating that it had been approved.

"We will not do this unless we have first been given notice in writing from the exchange furnishing us with the films, that the statement is true," said the exhibitors.

"The exchanges for their part cannot afford to misinform us to this effect."

The chief finally agreed that this was reasonable in view of the handicap under which the board is now working and consented to the arrangement. As the result there has been practically no trouble in Cincinnati regarding the enforcement of the law. Roe S. Eastman.

MINNEAPOLIS EXHIBITORS PREPARE FOR WAR

The Battle This Winter Will Be with the $2.00 "Legitimate" Houses, and Only the Best Attractions Will Hold the Patrons Who Are Fast Deserting to the Superior Photoplays and Greater Comforts of the Motion Picture Theatres

Special to The Motion Picture News
Minneapolis, Sept. 22.

WITH a pronounced forward movement in the motion picture business already under way, the theatres of the old school are going to face a fight for their existence in Minneapolis this winter, and unless the best attractions obtainable are shown, Minneapolis money is likely to find its way to the motion picture coffers.

Changes in the film theatre line-up have so massed the theatres in the business district that ten minutes' walk from almost any point in the business district will take the theatregoer to one of the houses offering comfort and convenience that other theatres can not offer and offering the best of attractions.

The New Saxe theatre on Seventh street has opened with a straight-away picture program that is carefully chosen and the Lyric, another Saxe house, has changed its plans and will show the Paramount films, charging ten and twenty cents for the admission.

The New Palace theatre, which, when opened, will be the largest theatre and the most thoroughly equipped house in the city of either the old or new school, will put on films for at least half of its program.

New Saxe Is Fireproof

The capacity of the two new theatres combined is more than 3,000 and the opening of the New Saxe indicated that there will be no waste room in any of them.

The New Saxe is thoroughly fireproof, with one balcony, and is elegantly furnished. The aisles are carpeted, seats are comfortable and the interior decorations, in old ivory, gold and red, are worked out artistically. Full particulars were given in the Motion Picture News of September 26.

The Lyric, which heretofore has always been in the market for the best offerings, will show films of the latest novels and plays and will offer the same high class house service as before.

Ruben and Finkelstein, owners of the New Palace, will conduct this house in conjunction with their other theatre, the New Grand. They have announced that they will buy the best films obtainable. These will be alternated with a few high class vaudeville acts. The New Palace will have retiring rooms and parlors, a nursery and check room.

Young Women Ushers Are Popular

Ushering is beginning to be looked upon as an art in Minneapolis theatres, and many managers are employing young women. Patrons of theatres appreciate good usher service as they do good table service in a cafe, and the managers who have learned this have responded quickly.

Courtesy and alacrity are vital points in ushering. To get a late customer seated quickly and politely and with so little friction that he can enjoy the film from the moment he sits down, is an accomplishment that only well-trained and experienced ushers have.

The success following the increasing of ushering forces has caused the smaller theatres to better their service.

Up-to-Date Exchange Methods

Any mystery necessary in the motion picture business should be confined to the plots in the films and not in the business methods of the film men, in the opinion of B. N. Judell, manager of the Mutual Film Company's Minneapolis branch. The branch has just moved from its limited quarters in the Temple Court building to a new, ground floor store building at 22 Sixth street N., in the heart of the retail business section.

The new branch has show windows, 4,200 square feet of floor space on the first floor and a full basement beneath.

The company will get into the game as other business concerns do.

The show windows willl show the company's wares, the store will handle film and theatre equipment and the business will be modern in every respect.

Mr. Judell wants every Minneapolis resident to know that his firm is in the business of selling picture film and will ask them, through his advertising methods, to go where Mutual films are shown.

This is the only branch but one now having a ground floor office, but others are considering similar moves.

Many agree with Mr. Judell that when the housewife goes to market to look over the season's offering in table delicacies and new fabrics, she would enjoy at the same time looking over the film market to see what is coming and where it will be.

A New Advertising Feature

Maxson F. Judell, assistant manager, is carrying out a new advertising feature that is aimed to get the public in closer touch with the motion picture people. He issues every few days a news review of the motion picture field.

The review gives the movements of the players, brief notes as to big plays in the making, personal news of the players and news of the film world in general. It is printed on one sheet of paper and is sent to the theatres to be posted in the entrances of lobbies.

The reviews are also shown in the display windows of the new branch office.

Mr. Judell believes that Minneapolis, far from being film crazy, is just becoming film wise, and that the prospects were never brighter for a good fall and winter season.

Binghamton Censor Fight to City Council

Central New York Managers Watching the Outcome as a Favorable Decision Might Open Way for Sunday Exhibitions

Special to The Motion Picture News
Binghamton, N. Y., Sept. 23.

THE fight between the exhibitors and the city officials has been carried into the common council, and a lively conflict is likely to result.

Ever since Mayor William R. Ely asked the motion picture theatres to close on Sunday there has been a considerable stir, and it is probable that the council will uphold the mayor in an effort to ascertain the legal status of the question.

At the last meeting of the aldermen an ordinance was introduced directing that the corporation counsel make an appeal to the Appellate Division from the decision of Justice McCann rendered in favor of the exhibitors who asked for an injunction against the city. Justice McCann in his decision holds that motion picture exhibitions on Sunday are legal.

As soon as the ordinance was read one alderman protested, and it went over under the rule. He argued that in view of the fact that one decision had been rendered by such a high authority that the matter should be dropped.

All exhibitors in central New York have their eyes focused on the Binghamton fight because this decision may pave the way for the return of Sunday exhibitions in other cities where the ban is on.

NEW BOISE THEATRE OPENS

Special to The Motion Picture News
Boise, Idaho, Sept. 21.

The Cozy-Tracy Theatre, Boise, Idaho, is the name of a new motion picture theatre which has just opened up here. The theatre was formerly known as the Old Boz, but has been closed almost a year.

Fred N. Tracy is the proprietor and is a strong advertiser, and expects to made the business pay. Thus far he has had good crowds at the house.

Serials Are Money-Getters in New Brunswick

Business Sustained in Motion Pictures Although the War Compelled the Cancellation of Annual Fairs—Free Religious Subjects Failed to Divert Patronage from Regular Houses—Managers Advertise Extensively with Satisfactory Results—Serial Dates Arranged to Avoid Clash

Special to The Motion Picture News

St. John, N. B., Sept 23.

BUSINESS continues brisk with local theatre managers, are the reports from the Imperial, Gem, Lyric, Star, Unique and Gaiety theatres. Everything is satisfactory despite the direful predictions made concerning what would happen in the amusement world when war broke out.

Free motion pictures were offered at the Opera House last week, in the Russell creation pictures, but not much interest was manifested, and they did not hurt the regular receipts in the other houses. Though in other cities through Canada annual fall fairs and exhibitions were cancelled because of the European trouble, the managers of the St. John event of this nature persisted in carrying out their exhibition, and it was quite successful.

The motion picture houses increased their business to quite an extent. Special features were billed at all the houses for the week of the fair.

Serials Seem Popular.

The serial scheme in pictures has caught the fancy here and the belief is that it has been responsible for much of the steady flow of business through the warm months of summer.

Most of the theatres have had their especial serial feature and the nights of its showing have proved particularly encouraging to the development of the scheme, from a box-office standpoint.

An extensive advertising campaign was conducted by each house before the arrival of the opening dates for its particular serial. Heavily inked, large black question marks standing out boldly against the surrounding whiteness of the columns heralded the coming of the "Million Dollar Mystery" to the Unique theatre, as well as the inducement of the money prize offered for the solution of the story.

Then came many notices in advance of the showing and the result was that on the opening nights large crowds flocked to the house, and each succeeding showing has been marked with an increased attendance.

Successful Advertising Plan.

Another very successful advertising scheme was carried out in connection with the presentation of the "Lucille Love" series at the Gem theatre. An ordinary letter appeared some time previous properly dated and signed, asking information and offering a reward for the whereabouts of "Lucille Love, an attractive young woman of about twenty years, last seen in Montreal, and said to be then on her way to St. John."

This letter started people talking for, they had never heard, that is the most of them, of Lucille, and the comment was augmented when there appeared daily in bold, black type in the local columns of the city newspapers, in a bordered box the offer of a reward for her whereabouts or information which would lead to her discovery.

It was always strongly-hinted that she was supposed to be on her way to St. John. Finally, a few days before she was due at the Gem, came the announcement that she had been found, and was really headed for St. John, and expected at that theatre on Monday.

Fine Drawing Cards.

The Imperial was one of the first theatres to take to the serial scheme in St. John. When "What Happened to Mary" proved so successful with them, the "Kathleen" series was begun, and it has proved an attractive drawing card.

It has been aided by an extensive advertising campaign continued right up to the close. This theatre is now continuing its policy by the showing of another serial hit, "The Trey o' Hearts," as well as an Alice Joyce series, in addition to the Selig-Hearst News Pictorial. The latter is also being shown at the Gem, where the Marc McDermott series of "The Man Who Disappeared" is also running. The Imperial also has an innovation in the first motion pictures of local events, the soldiers off to war.

Different days were taken for the showing of each of the serial films, so that there would be no conflicting among those who wished to see the several instalments of each series. Thus it was that the crowds were well sustained throughout the summer.

One of the chief regrets of local managers in this regard is that they have been unable to have the showing of these serial chapters come closer than has been the case.

While it has been possible to present one instalment a week in some pictures, for the most part the pictures have been separated by a fortnight which tends to lessen the interest of the patrons.

However, it has been shown that the serial picture is popular in St. John. It has proved a money-getter when the thoughts of the public were turned towards the great outdoors, the parks, and the seashore, during the warm summer months, and that there has been no slackening to any great extent of receipts is due in a large measure to the success of the serial stories.

Thanhouser to Release Yellowstone Park Film

THE first expedition of motion picture actors to be granted governmental permission to take pictures in Yellowstone National Park, has returned to the Thanhouser studio.

MIGNON ANDERSON

In the sending of a company to the national reservation the Thanhouser management scored a triumph. There have been permits granted for the use in the park of motion picture cameras, but never before allowing a company of actors to actually work on a picture.

The Yellowstone trip constitutes an advance in the educational phase of the motion picture industry. By these pictures, which will soon be released by the Thanhouser company, the scenic wonders of the nation's first playground will be brought to the millions of people in the United States who are unable to go to the park.

This point was given emphasis by Secretary of the Interior Lane, in granting the permit.

"I want as many of the people of the United States to enjoy these national parks as is possible," he said. "The motion picture brings the wonders to those who cannot journey here to view them with their own eyes."

The pictures will first be shown to the Secretary of the Interior at Washington. The company which went to Yellowstone Park was headed by Mignon Anderson and Morris Foster, John Lehnberg appeared in the character parts.

FACTS FROM QUAKER CITY FILM CIRCLES

"Reel Fellows" Meet New President and Hold Promising Business and Social Gathering—Bosworth Representative Entertains Trade and Daily Press—New Stanley Theatre Opens with Ten-Cent Prices—What the Exchanges Are Doing

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Philadelphia, Sept. 23.

"FOR the purpose of research into the souls of all 'Reel Fellows,' sounding the depths of their good fellowship, getting a line on their appetites and capabilities for enjoyment of entertainment of the most original and startling description:—

"It was decreed and ordered (and done) that a festive foregathering be arranged to take place on Sunday, September Thirteenth, in the afternoon, at the Ridge Avenue theatre, in the city of Philadelphia:—

"And all 'Reel Fellows,' near-real, would-be-real, and notoriously 'regular fellows' be invited."

Having thus far plagiarized Steve Talbot's letter of invitation, it might be well to say a few words of what actually did happen on the fatal afternoon of September 13.

The newly-elected president, Eugene L. Perry, opened the proceedings by entertaining the festive foregathering with several selections on the piano. This was followed by a visit to the rear of the stage, where "Smiling Jay" Emanuel had laid out the festive boards (one sheet and three sheets only, all others having been barred by the "Bored Censor). These boards, although small in size, groaned under their loads of "eats," while the liquid refreshments floated awash in ice-filled tubs behind the improvised bar, which was covered with the now supposedly obsolete six-sheets.

Having imbibed freely, wisely and not too well, the assembled multitude then adjourned to the auditorium, where entertainment of a different character was given. The Globe theatre (Juniper and Market streets) orchestra rendered several very snappy selections, until rudely interrupted by Tom Gillen, who after making a few remarks, introduced Charles Boyd's "Petticoat Minstrels," of whom there were seven. Their very clever skit was followed by a two-reel Keystone.

Promise Clubhouse Soon

The business meeting was called to order at 4:20 P. M. and Simon Libros, vice-president and one of the chief organizers, introduced the president, Eugene L. Perry. In a few brief but stirring remarks the president defined the object of the organization, and which boiled down, can be stated in three words, "Sociability with business." He also painted a word picture of the club house of the "Reel Fellows," as it is to be. The picture itself had apparently been viewed through rose-colored glasses, but there is no real reason why every good "Reel Fellow" should not put his shoulder to the wheel and help make Friend Perry's dream come true.

The business part of the meeting concluded with the receiving of applications for membership, and the payment by some of their initiation fees. One very modest gentleman, who is a big theatre owner here, being interested in about thirty houses, but who refused to allow his name to be used, contributed a "half century" to the cause.

Promise has also been made by a very prominent manufacturer to furnish the club house from cellar to garret as soon as a permanent building is secured. Both these announcements were received with much applause.

Financial Secretary Steve Talbot reported the finances of the club in very excellent condition, and received some ten or twelve initiation fees, in addition to a similar number of applications. This brings the actual paid-up membership to between forty and fifty, with applications from over one hundred more still pending.

"Smiling Jay" then passed out samples of the "weed," not, however, labeled Pittsburgh this time, and the entertainment was under way again. Richter and Moore, cabaret entertainers, were followed by another showing of the motion picture which had been made at Atlantic City on the first outing, August 16.

Bosworth Banquets Newspaper Men

It has been said that "there is nothing new under the sun," but it seems that Carl H. Pierce, special representative of Bosworth, Inc., is likely to change that saying. He planned and put over on Wednesday, September 23, something which sets a precedent in Filmdom at least. On that day at 6:30 P. M., he invited the dramatic editors of all the Philadelphia newspapers and representatives of the trade papers to be the guests of his firm at a specially prepared banquet.

The idea back of this spread is not so much publicity for Bosworth directly, as to have the newspapermen meet the trade paper representatives and other men from the film industry and by an interchange of ideas over the festive board to give the men of the "dailies" a broader view of the motion picture and its position, present and future.

Among the invited guests were George Horace Lorimer, editor of the Saturday Evening Post; Howard Bonite, of the Public Ledger; Mr. Harry, of the Evening Ledger; Mr. Diamond, of the North American; J. Duffy, of the Press; David Smiley, of the Bulletin; H. Deick, of the Record; Harry Knapp, of the Inquirer; W. Barren Lewis, city editor of the Press; Mr. Ferris and F. V. Armato, of the Evening Telegraph, all of the Philadelphia newspapers. William A. Johnson, president; R. M. Vandivert, advertising manager, and Julian M. Solomon, Philadelphia representative of THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS; W. Stephen Bush of the "Moving Picture World," and Steve Talbot, of the "Billboard," will constitute the trade paper array, and the business men will be Stanley Mastbaum, Eugene L. Perry, George Mann and Abe L. Einstein, of the Stanley Company, and William E. Smith of the Famous Players Exchange.

The Evening Telegraph is at present the only Philadelphia newspaper which carries a motion picture section, but it is expected that one or more of the other dailies will follow suit after hearing at first hand what success has attended the venture in other places. If the banquet does nothing more than to give the editors and dramatic critics a new idea of the motion picture, it will have been in every way a success from the viewpoint of the host.

In order to give the newspaper men an idea of the modern picture as portrayed by the up-to-date companies, Bosworth's coming release, "The Pursuit of the Phantom," was shown after the banquet.

Another thing introduced was Bosworth's new press sheet, gotten up in the form of a miniature newspaper, and which made its first public appearance at the banquet.

New Theatre Opens on Market Street

The Ruby theatre, Marshall and Market streets, Philadelphia, is the newest photoplay house to invade this already well covered business thoroughfare. It opened its doors to the public on the afternoon of September 5 with Jesse Lasky's production, presenting Edmund Breese in "The Master Mind."

The house itself has been remodeled from what was formerly a business building but is in no sense to be compared with the old store show. On the contrary, it is a complete, well-equipped and very beautiful little theatre, seating about 350, with ample standing room for at least 100 more. The exterior is of terra cotta and gray brick and the lobby is finished in marble with mosaic tile floor.

The only display of posters is made by means of one sheets in brass frames. The upper floor, which still has the big plate glass windows from the former store, is used for the simple display of a single three sheet in each window, the balance of the window space being taken up with neatly worded announcements as to the character of the plays shown within.

The interior is handsomely but simply decorated in mauve and gold, with panel effects in plaster for relief. The floor, which is of concrete, is covered in the standing space and the aisles by a thick carpet of mottled brown, which harmonizes with the interior decorations and the leather-upholstered and mahogany-finished seats. The building itself is about 40 x 100 feet and the seats are unusually wide and comfortable and spaced far apart as to rows. There are four exits at the front, one on the side and two at the rear of the building.

Two independent lighting systems give either a direct or semi-indirect illumination. Music is furnished at present by a piano, but a Moeller organ is being installed, and will be in operation within a week.

The attendants are all uniformed, the ushers being girls, who wear the regulation grey of all the Stanley chain of houses. A waterboy, also in grey, is also in attendance.

Among the innovations in this house are toilets for both sexes. While the newer houses up-town have these conveniences, this is the first of the East Market street picture houses to provide them.

Model Operating Room

The operating room is indeed a model and is one of the best constructed and best ventilated in the city. It follows the compartment idea. Access to the balcony on which this is located is to be had by a carpeted stairway, in itself an innovation, which leads first to the manager's office. The office has a window opening directly into the auditorium.

From the office a fireproof door leads into the operating booth. Here one finds two Powers 6-A motor-driven machines. So far as known, this is the only house in the city at present using mechanical drive, the fire marshal's ruling requiring two licensed operators to be always in attendance. This is no doubt the reason why other houses have not installed the motor-drive.

The rewind room is in a separate compartment beyond the operating booth, and the rheostats are in still another compartment partitioned off from the rewind room. In each case these compartments are well ventilated by exhaust fans, and the operating room, particularly, is the coolest which the writer has visited in the city.

The current used is direct current, and is taken from the outside mains, no mechanical device except the rheostats being necessary to convert it for use in the machines. The screen is a plain plaster wall, about 11 x 14 feet.

The two operators are Tipton A. Goldberg and William Williams, both licensed. The house manager is Thomas M. Chalfont, who is assisted by C. Godwin. The theatre is operated by the Stanley Company, which owns or controls nearly thirty others in this city and nearby towns.

The program being shown at present consists exclusively of Famous Players and Lasky productions, as the main attractions, with the Trey o' Hearts, Pathé Daily News and single reel comedies as fillers.

The admission is straight ten cents, a new thing for Market street houses, although several houses along the street have in the past tried one and two days a week with more or less success. There are two houses west of City Hall which charge high prices for admisson, but the Ruby is competing not with them, but with five-cent houses on both sides and within two blocks each way.

World Film Branch to Move Office

While on his tour around the country, visiting the various World Film company branches, Mr. Louis J. Selznick, president and general manager, stopped over in Philadelphia. After looking over the film situaton as well as he could during his limited stay, Mr. Selznick made arrangements whereby the local branch office would move into new and more commodious quarters at 1316 Vine street, next door to their present location.

This move is necessitated by the rapidly increasing business, under George J. Briehoff, and is also in preparation for the coming program of daily releases.

Alco Opens Philadelphia Branch

The very newest exchange to open in Philadelphia is the Alco Film Exchange, Inc., whose headquarters will be at 1331 Vine street. John D. Clark will guide the destinies of this exchange from his newly-furnished mahogany office.

Judging from the expressions of opinions on the "film rialto," it would seem that the local exhibitors at least take kindly to the idea of another program of the calibre and quality which Alco promises from its list of coming releases.

Mr. Clark, himself, is well liked, having been until now with the Famous Players Exchange. He requests that note be made of the mistake in announcing the Globe Theatre Building as the office address. The office will be located on Vine street, as above, and in the heart of the "film district."

Box Office in New Building

William Fox's Box Office Attractions Company have removed from their temporary quarters at 1325 Vine street and are now safely anchored at the new building at 1333, which was especially erected for them. While they are not yet completely settled, they have some innovations under way which will make film history in Philadelphia.

Chief among these will be the private projecting room, where exhibitors may see what films they are renting. Joel A. Levy, the manager, should receive the credit for at last accomplishing this needed reform. There will be fewer exhibitors "stung" with poor features and the Box Office folks will no doubt find that their business will increase accordingly.

Harold Rodner, who last winter was very successful with his dramatic talks on certain selected pictures, is back in town and is booking for this concern. The office is working in cooperation with the Greater New York Film Rental Company, a few doors above, and which is also one of William Fox's ventures.

The Alhambra theatre, Twelfth and Morris streets, Philadelphia, which was recently purchased by Stanley Mastbaum for an undisclosed consideration, is being entirely redecorated and refitted and will open under its new management on September 28 with vaudeville and pictures. The pictures will be Paramount Program.

TO EVERY EXHIBITOR HIS OWN PROBLEM

THE individuality of the problems confronting the picture theatre owner and the diversity of their solutions is told in the stories of two houses in Kansas City. Within walking distance of each other, the conditions surrounding the one are entirely different from the conditions about the other. And methods that made good business for one fail almost entirely in the other.

The new Royal theatre, located in the center of the uptown shopping district, is perhaps the costliest exclusive picture house west of Chicago. Recently completed at a cost of more than $50,000, its rent and expenditures are so large that it must be packed many times a day at an admission fee of ten cents to return a profit to its owner.

And the Troost theatre, surrounded by a boarding house section and drawing its patronage nightly in competition with the cheaper vaudeville houses, has been unable to raise its prices to the higher level.

Within a few blocks of the Troost Theatre, two vaudeville houses offer seven acts and several reels of first-run pictures for ten, twenty and thirty cents. Yet, the Troost Theatre is located in the residence district but faced the problem of competing with the vaudeville houses which beckoned the shop girl, the clerk and the stenographer living near it.

The price of admission thus became a factor in the race for business between the two. And the Troost Theatre stuck to five cents.

The Royal is not so confronted with the problem of the admission fee. Its patronage is unlimited, shoppers, business men and women, out of town visitors and everyone who was in the business district.

Through its lavishness, its display, and its greater financial power, it could fight the vaudeville and legitimate houses on the basis of attractions shown.

The result has been that the policy of the Royal is now the showing only of lengthy, stupendous features, running afternoon and night, and changing twice a week. The Troost Theatre has been obliged to adopt the policy of five reels of new pictures every night, running nothing over two reels in length, and, as a concession to the nearby vaudeville, staging a single song-and-dance act each Sunday afternoon.

The Royal Theatre has been enabled to advertise in the newspapers, to program its offering. The Troost avenue house was enabled, owing to the class of its patrons, to depend entirely on screen advertising. It never advertises, it never runs a feature longer than two reels, and it never shows a story featuring "kid actors."

The uptown theatre is run on absolutely different lines. Its program for the last two weeks shows only four subjects: Henrietta Crosman in "The Unwelcome Mrs. Hatch," Jack London's "Burning Daylight," Dustin Farnum in "The Virginian," and H. B. Warner in "The Lost Paradise." In the same length of time, the residence theatre would show four different reels each night.

That the policies of the two houses are successful is shown in the box-office receipts. Both are on the right side of the ledger, although during the first few weeks when the Royal showed a diversified program that could not be said.

CLUB OF RED HEADED BOYS

SPOKANE, Wash., has at least one theatre manager who believes in getting right in on the ground floor with the kiddies and bringing up his future patrons in the right way.

He is Dr. H. S. Clemmer, who runs the Casino and Clem picture houses. As the first step, the doctor has organized a club for all the brick-topped boys in Spokane, to be known as Clemmer's Red Heads. The membership already threatens to go high into the hundreds.

Dr. Clemmer himself was a red head once, though his rubicund locks since have been seriously assaulted by baldness and streaks of gray.

But he knows the humiliations and heaps of epithets centered upon the small boy's flaming dome and he insists that, instead of being a target for ridicule, the red-headed boy should find his vivid locks an asset.

So he has invited all the lads with Titian-tinted tresses who are between six and twelve years of age to register their names at the Casino for the new club.

To each is given a numbered button, bearing the inscription of the red-headed organization. And he has planned a number of entertainments for them. On Monday, September 14, he had the boys as his guests at the Casino and then bundled them onto special street cars to take them to the Interstate fair.

PRODUCER LECTURES ON FILMS

J. IGNATIUS FINNIGAN has produced a four-reel war drama through the Yale Feature Film Company of St. Louis, entitled "Quantrell; or, the Border Wars of Missouri and Kansas." Missouri, as a neutral state during the war, was nevertheless the scene of many a conflict between the opposing factions.

The pictures were made at the actual places of the original battles, and Mr. Finnigan lectures where the films are run, telling the dates and names of places and characters in the pictures.

The feature is arousing great interest because of its local historical value, and it is being booked by many exhibitors.

PRIZES FOR THE CHILDREN

THE Alhambra, Washington, D. C., is making a unique offering in the form of coupons issued with each ticket. The one having the greatest number of these coupons is entitled to a prize. The contest will close in September, and the prizes, especially designed for the children, consist of elaborate toys.

Wm. A. Airey, manager of the Alhambra, has a warm spot in his heart for the young folks, and he is always doing something for their interests. He invites suggestions of educational, historical or classic photo-plays from school pupils, and will secure these films and advertise them in sufficient advancement for students to take advantage of their appearance.

TOM MOORE, the man who does big things in Washington, D. C., has given the Capital City the last word in motion picture theatres in the opening of the Strand. With extensive remodeling to the amount of $18,000, an artistic display of electric lights on the exterior, an attractive and convenient new entrance, and a list of booking that compass the best of the world's industry, there is nothing left for the public to desire.

The interior decorations are restful and artistic in color and design. The lighting system is mellow and the comforts for patrons are looked after in the form of easy seats, broad aisles, retiring rooms, a luxuriantly fitted-up foyer, etc. Young lady ushers are in attendance, most courteous and attentive.

The opening production was that of "Cabiria," direct from New York. The prices for this production are placed at fifty and twenty-five cents, according to location, with couponed seats.

Mr. Moore introduced a novelty in offering "Cabiria," in that he created the Strand into a veritable Oriental palace, with burning censers emitting aromatic odor, gorgeous draperies and walls hung with ancient weapons. Even the ushers and theatre attendants were dressed in Oriental costumes. The stage was set as an Oriental palace, made possible through the courtesy of Charles Hanford, the well-known classic actor, who offered his private scenery, which is historically correct.

The ensemble was brilliant and effectve. Mr. Moore promises to mount all of the attractions at the Strand in a similar manner.

HOUSE FLIES MADE USEFUL AT LAST

WHEN the St. Louis Republic was conducting a swat-the-fly campaign, Fred Wehrenberg, manager of the Best Theatre, Jefferson avenue and Cherokee street, took advantage of the interest evinced in the crusade and used the idea to advertise his theatre.

All school children who brought fifty dead flies received a ticket to the show, and while the flies were not rigorously counted, the business increased to the extent that every child brought along admiring parents, relatives and friends, and Mr. Wehrenberg was voted a wide-awake and liberal motion picture exhibitor.

BABY PICTURE CONTEST

A. J. KRUSE, a grocer, found a way to increase his business and at the same time bring big business to the Paris Motion Picture Theatre at Decatur, Ill., by putting on a baby contest.

Pictures of nearly a hundred children of the city were taken and slides were made. For a whole week these pictures were flashed on the screen at the Paris Theatre and every patron was given a ticket to vote on the prettiest and most comical babies.

Thousands of votes were received during the week. The picture of Mrs. H. D. Feltz in her yard with her children and her chickens won the first of the sixteen prizes in the two divisions.

First of New Lubin Series Promises Success

Lord Cecil, the Hero, Has All the Pleasing Qualities of Robert Louis Stevenson's Prince Florizel of Bohemia

THE latest entrant in the lists of serial film productions is the Lubin series entitled "The Beloved Adventurer." The series will consist of fifteen reels released on Mondays.

The first one was shown on September 14. Strictly speaking, the reels do not form a serial, but rather a group of stories in which the principal character is the same, but the subordinate ones vary. It is in this case similar to series which have appeared on many occasions in magazines.

SCENE FROM "AN AFFAIR OF HONOR," PART 3 OF "THE BELOVED ADVENTURER" LUBIN SERIAL (Released September 28)

Lord Cecil, an English peer, who in polish, urbanity and general culture is almost the equal of Robert Louis Stevenson's Prince Florizel of Bohemia, is the beloved adventurer. His code of honor is as fixed in its course as the movements of the planets, yet it allows him to always do the right thing at the right time.

In the second story what appears to him the right thing would hardly appear so to the average person, but Lord Cecil faces the situation without flinching.

"The Beloved Adventurer" was written by Emmet Campbell Hall, who has a large number of successful scenarios to his credit. Arthur V. Johnson is the man who has had charge of producing the series.

In the first story Lord Cecil appears in the role of a latter day knight-errant rescuing a girl from an unfortunate position which is partly of her own creation.

The girl, who is an heiress, has become infatuated with a penniless foreign count. This situation is really the result of careful scheming on the part of an adventuress, who is to get a large commission for marrying the girl to him.

In order to appear quite out of it, she pretends to object and has the count plan an elopement. Lord Cecil learns of this and has a friend drive the car in which the couple start for a minister.

They are taken to an inn where an obliging actress accuses the count of being her husband. The girl realizes her mistake and allows Lord Cecil to see her safely home.

The second adventure is more tragic in its nature, as it concerns treachery on the part of Lord Cecil's younger brother. After straightening things out he makes it clear to the younger man that he considers suicide his only course. Whether or not his suggestion is adopted is not disclosed in this reel.

THEATRE OWNER JOINS KANSAS EXCHANGE

Special to The Motion Picture News

Kansas City, Sept. 22.

Carl Mensing, owner of a string of picture theatres in Leavenworth, Kan., and R. V. Rothermel, formerly manager of the special feature department of the local branch of the General Film Company, have joined the staff of the Kansas City Feature Film Company. Mr. Rothermel will handle the Paramount service for the Kansas City company.

Mr. Rothermel's departure from the General Film Company marks the abolishment of the special feature department in all the branch offices of that company. About six months ago the company began handling the special features through the regular service channels in several cities.

Mr. Mensing will not give up his theatres in Leavenworth, but will manage them from here.

The Theatre of Today

This Page, Conducted Under the Auspices of the Buyers' Service Department, Is Designed to Bring the Manufacturers of Accessories and Equipment and the Exhibitors Into Closer Touch with Each Other. It Is for the Service of the Buyer and the Seller Alike. All Questions Will Be Answered in These Columns and Communications Will Be Welcomed

THE COST OF LOCAL FEATURES

IN answer to a number of inquiries resulting from an article on this page in last week's issue, entitled "Success with Local-Event Pictures," I have obtained an interview from Mr. H. Frohmann, who took the pictures of the baby parade mentioned. I have appended it herewith, and it will answer the questions "How much will it cost?" and "How shall I go about to get a local event taken?" for a number of these inquiries have been framed in these words.

The prices quoted here are on Eastman stock, the only kind that Mr. Frohmann uses. Mr. Frohmann, representing the Acme Film Company, 145 West 45th street, New York City, makes a specialty of local event features, expressed himself as follows:

"An exhibitor, Mr. Brown, we'll say, in a certain town, learns of a coming local firemen's parade, baby contest, a dedication of a new school, or something that the town and local people are directly interested in.

"He considers having the film made of this local happening and use it as a feature attraction in his house. In some way he finds out that I am in the business of making local event pictures and gets in touch with me. I call on him, find out the nature of the event, in this case a local volunteer firemen's parade, and suggest that he will need about five hundred feet of film.

"The price of this film will be $87.50, and that includes negative and one print, which becomes the property of Mr. Brown, to rent to any other exhibitor or anything else he wants to do with it. After contracting with me to take a picture, he must start to advertise the coming feature, either by special circulars, advertising in the local papers, and on the screen of his theatre.

"The real need of this advertising lies in the fact that everybody in town, who intends to participate in, or witness the parade, will try to get into the picture. And the more local faces on the film, the better from a box office standpoint. The local advertising attended to, there is nothing to do until the day of the parade.

"On the day of the parade, the camera man or men, as the case may be, gets on the job early, snaps the crowd assembling, gets views of any happening in the vicinity of the line of parade.

"If I think only one camera man is needed I station him at the reviewing or grand stand, and snap the parade as it passes, and between times obtain views of the crowd, the idea being to get as many faces as possible in the picture. We will say I have now used the five hundred feet of film contracted for and that Mr. Brown suggests that while we are there we get some pictures of different parts of the town and the front of his theatre, showing his patrons going in and coming out. We will say this takes up another two hundred feet of film.

"My prices are twenty cents per foot up to two hundred feet, seventeen and one-half cents up to a thousand feet, and fifteen cents per foot over a thousand feet. These prices include everything, camera, camera man, or men, titles, subtitles, negative and one print."

These prices apply to any town, within a radius of a hundred miles of New York, and the film can be delivered twenty-four hours after taking the picture.

Another side of the local-event-feature is this: Let the exhibitor buy his own camera.

These cameras range in price from $80 to $325. After getting his film he can have it developed, printed and have subtitles made at a cost of about five cents per foot, titles separate at six cents per foot. A glance over any issue of THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS will show the exhibitor where he can get the camera and have his films finished, etc.

The raw film can be purchased for $2.50 to $3.25 per 100 feet. Suppose the exhibitor gets a $300 camera, one thousand feet of film, and starts in. Suppose he takes one local event a week, say one thousand feet of film or two events of five hundred feet each.

Then his expenses will look like this:

Raw film, at $3 per 100 ft., 1,000 ft.	$30.00
Printing, developing and subtitles, at 5c per ft., 1,000 ft.	50.00
Titles, at 6c per ft., 5 ft.	.30
	$80.30

He can run this film two or three days or a week, if necessary. Taking a run of three days, the average 500-foot local event would stand him $40.30, or quite a little less than the average big feature of $25 to $50 a day, and perhaps draw better. Then again, if another theatre in town could use the film to advantage, he could get some of his outlay back by renting it, say, for $10 or $15 a day.

"GOOD SHOWS OR NOTHING"

"GOOD shows or nothing" is the motto of Manager Robert Brown, of Middlesboro, Ky., of the Manring Theatre, to which Middlesboro is indebted for the very best attractions.

Strict adherence to this slogan has cost money, lots of it, but upon this plan remarkable success is being built for the house. Time and again, the manager says, he has been advised by kindly intentioned friends to "give the people any old thing," and thus make more money for himself.

"I believe that I have given the people the best pictures produced," he says, "and it is my intention to keep it up. Neither the people of a community nor its institutions can stand still. They must either advance or go backward." And it was on this philosophical conclusion that he long ago set the standard of the Manring upon a sliding scale, inclined upward.

"IN fact," he says, "the public itself fixes the standard of amusement in a community, and it is only necessary to keep in close touch with their changing tastes to supply what they demand. In following out this method of catering to the theatre-going public, however, I have often been forced to put on pictures and vaudeville bills here at popular prices that could not, and would not, be offered in the larger cities at twice the price.

"Although Middlesboro has a population of a little over 7,000, and is located in what was once the wildest and roughest section of the mountain country, it has become a model, progressive city with a population made up of the highest type of citizenship. Giving large city shows in a small town and at small town prices often has proven a serious problem. However, the reward that comes with merited appreciation fully justifies the efforts of the theatre manager who really desires to please patrons."

Some of the recent high-class film productions shown at the Manring were "Quo Vadis?" "Last Days of Pompeii," "Terrors of the Jungle" and "Wild Animals at Large." In order to obtain these pictures Manager Brown was compelled to pay dear for them.

The public does not realize that every day added to the age of a picture lessens the cost to the house showing it. Instead of waiting thirty to sixty days to secure a picture for his patrons, when it would cost him half what it would require to get an up-to-the-minute film, the features and other productions are always of the newest.

WAR FAILS TO CURTAIL PRODUCTION

Special to The Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Sept. 21.

While it is a fact that manufacturers will suffer a great loss because of the European war making it impossible to sell prints abroad, local studio managers emphatically deny the stories that it will reduce production in Los Angeles, by the established companies having regular releases.

It is said that statistics show that fully 40 per cent. of the prints from American negatives are sold to European buyers, while the product of European manufactures shown to the American public constitutes but eight per cent.

Of the American negative fully 70 per cent. is made in Los Angeles and suburbs.

OPERATOR BURNED IN BOOTH

Emil Rush, operator working under the jurisdiction of Local No. 165, Moving Picture Operators Union of Cincinnati, was severely burned during a fire at the Elm theatre at Elm and Findlay streets several days ago.

The fire resulted in the operator's attempt to save an old and badly patched film, which became ignited when it caught in the machine. He was burned about the hands, arms, face and neck. Most of his hair was singed from his head. Little damage other than to Rush and the film was caused.

ROUSSEL ON THE ROAD TO RECOVERY

Friends of Arthur Roussel, vice-president of Pathé, will be pleased to learn that the crisis of his illness has been passed, and that he is now on the road to recovery after an eight weeks' confinement to his bed.

Warner's First Special Is "Kitty Cobb"

James Montgomery Flagg's "Adventures of Kitty Cobb" Are Announced for Release October 5—Special Paper with the Production

WHEN James Montgomery Flagg, the celebrated illustrator, produced his series of drawings portraying "The Adventures of Kitty Cobb," he little dreamed of the popularity they were destined to arouse, yet by the time only three or four of them had appeared an enormous public was eagerly looking for them week after week.

The drawings were originally made for the New York Sunday World. Then they were syndicated to leading newspapers throughout the United States, the aggregate circulation mounting into the millions. Afterward they were published in book form, and the book proved to be one of the "big sellers." Finally, the motion picture camera got busy with Kitty, the result being one of the most delightful four-part dramas ever filmed. This picture has been secured by Warner's Features, Inc., and will be released shortly as a special.

Having been made under the personal supervision of Mr. Flagg, the picture carries out the artist's ideas to perfection. The part of Kitty is played by Marian Swayne, a pretty, sweet-faced little lady who bears a strong natural resemblance to the fascinating heroine of the drawings. She is supported by a strong cast, the photography is wonderful, and every detail has been carefully worked out.

At the offices of Warner's Features, Inc., it was stated that "Kitty Cobb" will probably be leased on October 5. A large amount of unusually attractive advertising matter has been prepared. The lithographs, for example, include, one, three, six, twelve, sixteen and twenty-four sheets. All are reproductions of original drawings made by Mr. Flagg for this purpose, and are in seven colors.

"Kitty Cobb" is the first of the specials which will be released by Warner's Features, Inc., in addition to the new complete program. Others will be announced in ample season for all interested.

Picture Playhouse to Market Comedies

With the Company's Three, Four and Five Reel Pictures, Exhibitors Will Have a Complete Evening Service

IN accordance with the progressive policy which has been characteristic of the Picture Playhouse Film Company since its entrance into the moving picture field, that company has just announced a new and distinct departure in marketing its films by purchasing a number of single and two reel comedies, which the company will hereafter add to its regular three, four and five reel service, so as to provide a complete evening service for the theatres which are booking its attractions.

The company announces that it has been successful in closing a contract for the purchase of a new series of comedies to be known as the "Polidor Series," which have been universally pronounced by the theatres at which they have been tried out as a great hit.

The results obtained were so completely satisfactory to both the moving picture theatre owners and to the Picture Playhouse Film Company that arrangements were immediately made to place the policy in operation.

If this booking of comedies with features continues to prove successful, it is probable that other feature houses will follow the lead of the Picture Playhouse Film Company in offering a like inducement to the trade, as the present demand for comedies is so great.

The comedies which the Picture Playhouse Film Company has arranged for immediate release will be shown at a private exhibition. An announcement of subjects and a review of the comedies will appear in these pages at an early date.

Peoria Exchange Finds Fall Business Excellent

Company Recently Placed Nine Projection Machines in Nearby Towns—It Carries Full Stock of Accessories

THE Peoria Film Exchange, of 505 Fulton street, Peoria, Ill., reports a steady increase in sales. This concern is owned and managed by S. N. Robinson president, and M. H. Livingston, secretary and treasurer.

The company carries in stock, all leading makes of projecting apparatus. The concern has a very interesting proposition for all purchasers, and any exhibitor wishing to purchase a motion picture machine, or any other article in his line, will do well to see the company.

Some of its recent installations are: The Royal Theatre, Monmouth, Ill., two 1914 model Motiographs, motor driven; the Apollo Theatre, Peoria, Ill., two 1914 model, motor driven, Motiographs; the Motiograph Theatre, Brimfield, Ill., one 1914 model, motor driven, Motiograph; the Metamora Picture Company, Metamora, Ill., one 1914 model Motiograph; the Rose Theatre, Minonk, Ill., one 1914 model, motor driven, Motiograph; the Lyric Theatre, Lacon, Ill., one 1914 model Motiograph.

How Exhibitors Advertise

MEDIEVAL HERALD AS A "BALLY-HOO"

THE Capital City Film Production Company, Albany, N. Y., hit upon a novel scheme recently to advertise one of its local films, screened at the Grand Theatre. A herald, costumed in the habit that his prototypes used to affect, promenaded the principal streets of the city. He had a rich voice and he knew how to use it. Stopping all of a sudden he would shout:

"I was a scoffer in the past. I did not believe in progress. Now I see myself as others see me. If advertising had been one of the forces of my day I would have laughed at it; science or business, all, everything must be of the old times like me.

"But now I know better. The Scotch bard said we have not the gift to see ourselves as others see us. It's not so, but a true word.

"I'll prove what I say. Were you at Chadwick Park during the week? Did you see the Senators in action? Were you over in Troy to see the races? Were you shopping on Pearl street during the week? Were you at the band concert in Washington Park last Sunday? No? Well, then perhaps you were at the corner-stone-laying of the Third Reformed Church? If you were at any of these places you can see yourself as others see you."

The listeners all expected an invitation to gaze in a crystal ball for the remarkable sum of twenty-five cents, or some like proposition. But none was forecoming. They waited the solution.

"Come one, come all, to Proctor's Grand and see how you looked when you went here and there. The eye of the camera was upon you. See yourselves if not for vanity, then for curiosity.

"You see I'm advertising now. It pays. Before I was a ghost I was a hard-shelled retrogressive crab; now I am a radical. Get in line. See moving pictures. Get the habit."

COOL COMFORT BY SUGGESTION

IT is no easy matter to hold business at an airdome when the temperature is hovering around the freezing mark, and the average citizen is thinking about starting a fire in his furnace.

Dennis J. Sheppard, proprietor of the Open Air Theatre in East Jersey, near First street, Elizabeth, N. J., is keeping up his attendance by eccentric advertising.

On the coolest nights Mr. Sheppard and his assistants parade around in their shirt sleeves and wield palm leaf fans, and the programs at the theatre are made up of pictures with a frigid atmosphere.

On the coolest night last week the feature picture was a two reeler chock full of snow scenes. A Pathe split reel showing scenery in Switzerland with ice-capped mountains as the piece de resistance, created more talk than many expensive features.

Strange as it may seem, the receipts were doubled the next night.

HOME TALENT IN FILMS

SPEAKING of gathering in summer business J. Floyd Hopkins, manager of the Colonial Theatre, Harrisburg, Pa., says his plan of producing home plays, written by home playwrights and acted by amateur home talent in home surroundings beats any one thing he ever tried for swelling box office receipts.

Hopkins, by the way, claims that this plan is entirely original with him, although since he adopted it several weeks ago it has been copied with success in other cities.

An expert motion picture photographer was brought here and he got right on the job with his little machine. Hopkins offered liberal prizes for scenarios by Harrisburg authors, and he got some crackerjacks. Then he organized a home company of more than one hundred amateurs who took to acting with great enthusiasm.

"You would be amazed," said the manager, "how many Harrisburg people are ambitious to become moving picture actors, and I guess it's the same way in every city if you only give 'em half a chance.

"It looks so easy to them when they see the professionals' acting thrown on the screen that they just 'mobilize' by the score when we call for volunteers.

"And speaking of that acting! Say! It has high-priced comedy beaten a hundred ways. In one act the heroine was supposed to be near drowning in the Susquehanna river, off Market street. Her city lover deserted her in the hour of peril, but her old-time country sweetheart got right on the job and rescued her.

"And would you believe it, at the very time she was supposed to be nine-tenths of the way to Paradise that amateur heroine just quit splashing around in the water and paused to adjust the comb in her hair. We didn't cut out a line of it, either. That is the kind of stuff that makes the fun.

"When you get a hundred home people acting for you in home surroundings you would be surprised how many hundreds more become interested and come to see the pictures. We put 'em on about once a week and advertise them well in the newspapers. It has been a big boom for the Colonial in what might have been a dull season.

"You interest not only the actors and their friends, but all the people in the parts of the town where the acting is pulled off.

"We go to the front door and ask the owner please to let us have the use of the house for a while for the film man. You ought to see the expression on his or her face, but the owner almost always consents. Once we induced the house owner to persuade the cook to climb out of the third story window in an elopement scene. She did it, too.

"Now, don't you think that's going to bring people to the theatre? The householder and his friends, the cook and her friends, the actor and their friends and anybody who hears about somebody they know having figured in the pictures in one way or another? It's a great scheme. If you run a motion picture theatre try it."

STICKING WITH A STANDBY

ONE of those popular advertising schemes which is "old yet ever new" is being tried out at the Royal Theatre, Elizabeth avenue, Elizabeth, N. J. of which William R. Brown is manager.

It is a voting contest, the two winners of which will be given a trip to Washington, D. C., with all expenses paid. Only women are allowed to compete for the prizes. Each five cent ticket sold at the theatre is worth ten votes, and ten cent tickets twenty votes.

Double votes are given at matinees. Strips of twenty tickets are offered to the competitors to sell among their friends, and these are good for from eight hundred to one thousand votes. The contest has just been started, and will close on October 17.

Nine local business men are also interested in it, and will bear a part of the expense, although the theatre gets the credit for running it off.

MONTREAL EXCHANGE BUYS LIFE PHOTO RIGHTS

The Equitable Film Exchange of Montreal, Canada, has purchased the exclusive Canadian rights to all of the Life Photo Film Corporation productions.

David Roskam, the president of the Equitable Film Exchange of Montreal, took a flying trip to this city in order to close this deal.

Mr. Roskam has just opened a suite of offices at 591 St. Catherine street, W., Montreal, through which he will handle all the Life Photo productions.

TURNER ENJOYS WELL EARNED REST

After a two weeks' visit among his friends in New York, Otis Turner, director of the Turner Special Feature Company, has returned again to the Pacific coast.

He does not intend to return to the direction of his company at once, however, but instead will spend the remaining three weeks of his vacation among his friends in and around Los Angeles.

Alco Exchanges Are Multiplying Fast

Lichtman, on Four Weeks' Tour, Reports Opening of Many Branches—Seely Finds New England Territory Responsive

THE Alco Film Corporation, of which there are five producing allies, The All Star Feature Corporation, The California Motion Picture Corporation, Popular Plays and Players, Inc., the Favorite Players Film Company and Excelsior Film Corporation, announces its complete program, which will be seen throughout the country beginning October 5, when Ethel Barrymore, in Augustus Thomas' "The Nightingale," will be released.

First comes Miss Barrymore, followed by the excellent Irish character delineator, Andrew Mack, in the popular work, "The Ragged Earl," and then Carlyle Blackwell in "The Key to Yesterday."

Al. Lichtman, for the past four weeks touring the country opening branch exchanges and contracting for the distribution of the Alco products, returns to New York this week with the announcement that the entire United States has been covered.

Although practically a closed corporation, the Alco people have been flooded with offers of financial assistance from prominent film men, if they would but allow the Alco program to be controlled in certain territory by them.

Walter Hoff Seely, head of the Alco, paid a flying visit to Boston the latter part of last week and reports excellent results of the Alco system throughout New England. Alexander Beyfuss, head of the California Motion Picture Corporation, reports the Coast up and ready to take Alco.

Paramount Releases Another London Film

"Martin Eden," a Bosworth Production, Pictures the Life of a Careless Sailor Regenerated Through the Love of a Girl

"MARTIN EDEN," Jack London's virile story of the escape of a young sailor from ignorance and poverty, has been made by Bosworth, Inc., into a feature film production of six reels, and is now being released through the Paramount Program.

We see Martin living the happy-go-lucky life of a sailor, and becoming leader of a gang of hoodlums. Then he meets a beautiful college girl, whom he loves, and is inspired by her to make more of his life.

The story of his struggle to do this makes an especially compelling and sympathetic story, its ruggedness softened by the two love stories in it, and by frequent touches of comedy.

Hobart Bosworth, who needs no introduction either to theatregoers or to picture fans, directed the production. He picked his types for the roles with unusual care, and the entire picture was directed in his usual masterly manner.

He was the first director to give the photographer credit on the screen. In "Martin Eden," as in other Bosworth productions, George W. Hill is announced as cinematographer.

It will be of interest to exhibitors to know that "Martin Eden," one of London's "best sellers," has been playing to record houses.

Jack London's novels are particularly adaptable to screen production on account of the sweeping action of the plots.

THEATRE CHAIN UNDER WAY IN MEMPHIS

PLANS for a new motion picture theatre, to be the first of a chain of five theatres to be erected in Memphis, Tenn., by the National Photoplay Theatres Company of Memphis, have been prepared by Mahan & Broadwell, architects. Construction work will begin at an early date. Messrs Good, Jones and McMahon, members of the company's building committee, have not decided whether the first theatre will be erected on Madison avenue or on Union avenue. Both lots are well out in the residence district.

The theatre will cost $10,000 and will be fireproof. It will have a glazed terra cotta front and will have a seating capacity of 500. The building will be equipped with a cooling and ventilating system, operated by fans in a refrigerating plant in the basement. A vaudeville stage will be provided.

SITES SOLD FOR THEATRES

PROPERTY at the northwest corner of Fifty-second and Locust streets, Philadelphia, has been conveyed by George Felt to Maurice Felt for a nominal consideration, subject to a mortgage of $50,000. The purchase includes Nos. 228 to 236 South Fifty-second street, with a total assessed value of $31,000. The first two are one-story brick stores, the last two are two-story brick dwellings, and No. 232 is a lot. The ground included in the purchase is 90.3 by 70 feet. Another lot, 100 by 151 feet, at the southwest corner of Fifty-second street and Wyalusing avenue, has also been conveyed by George Felt to Maurice Felt for a nominal consideration, subject to a mortgage of $32,000. The assessed value is $13,000.

It is said that both sites are to be used for moving picture theatres.

FILM THEATRE AT HUNTINGTON

A MODERN picture theatre, with a seating capacity of 700, and to cover a plot of ground 50 x 125, is to be built on School street, near the Huntington Station of the Long Island Railroad, by W. D. Eccleson, manager of the Bijou Theatre, Huntington, L. I.

According to the plans for the structure, which are being prepared by a local architect, the building will be two stories high and will be built of stucco, with a red tile roof. The general lines of the building will be in mission style of architecture. Every modern appliance for the presentation of moving pictures, it is announced, will be used in this new amusement place. Work on the project will start in a few days, and it is planned to open the house for the first show on Thanksgiving Day.

ADD ROOF GARDEN TO HOBOKEN THEATRE

THE U. S. Garden Theatre Company, of Elizabeth, N. J., which controls the theatre also owns the U. S. Theatre in Washington street, Hoboken, N. J., and plans are under way for the addition of a roof garden to that house at a cost of $50,000. The roof garden will be used for dancing. Frank G. Hall, president of the corporation personally manages the Hoboken house. It has a seating capacity of 2,200.

LET OGDEN THEATRE CONTRACTS

LOVEDAHL & JACKSON, building contractors at Ogden, Utah, have been awarded the brick contract on the Alhambra Theatre building in that city, and active work on the structure will begin within a few days. The approximate amount involved in the contract is $16,000.

THEATRES HERE AND THERE

THE Y. M. C. A. building in North Main street, New Canaan, Conn., is being altered for a moving picture theatre.

C. S. Ziroli has completed the plans for the proposed motion picture theatre to be built for the Royal Amusement Company at 61-62 Main street, Worcester, Mass., in the store now occupied by the Worcester Market Company.

It is expected work will begin soon.

George L. Sipps is figuring on plans for a moving picture theatre, 82 x 152 feet to be erected on Frankford avenue, above Columbia avenue, Philadelphia, for John M. Kennedy, Jr., at a cost of about $40,000.

The Hoffman Company is preparing plans for a motion picture theatre at Conshohocken, Pa., 65 x 100 feet, to cost about $25,000.

Alterations and Improvements

The Optic Theatre, 533 Main street, Los Angeles, under the management of Seth Perkins, is undergoing many changes for the better. This is to he made the bright spot of Main street, by additional electrical display on the front and in the lobby. The theatre is to be redecorated throughout, and a modern ventilating system installed. The admission will remain the same, five cents, at least for the present.

Work on the Grand Theatre, 221 Main street, Little Rock, Ark., which has recently been purchased by the American Photoplay Theatres Company, has been started under the direction of J. H. Grief, a motion picture show house expert, employed by that company. The theatre will undergo extensive changes, making it a first-class "movie" theatre.

The Academy of Music, Selma, Ala., is being re-seated and decorated at a cost of about six thousand dollars. Heyward Brothers & Wakefield are furnishing the chairs, which are unusual in that they are upholstered in cane, a covering particularly well adapted to use in a warm climate. The decorative scheme followed is green and ivory. The stage will be set after the manner popular with the larger houses of today.

The Academy of Music was originally a "legitimate" theatre, but during the past four years has been exhibiting pictures during "open time." The house seats 956 on three floors.

The Highland Theatre, Louisville, Ky., is being redecorated for the fall and winter season. In addition new equipment is being installed for the better projection of pictures shown. "The Lure," "Old Curiosity Shop" and "The Pied Piper" are some of the high-class films already booked. Mary Pickford will be featured each Sunday at the Highland.

Having completed plans for the purchase of the Astor Theatre property, Plainfield, N. J., Harry M. Covens, of Paterson, N. J., has signed contracts for the alterations of the building at a cost of nearly $25,000.

The attention of the new owners will be devoted exclusively to the presentation of motion pictures, and some of the finest films will he shown.

Sales and Leases

Oliver Morosco's principal theatre in his home town, Los Angeles, is to be a motion picture theatre, at least for the present, as The Hamburger-Majestic has been leased to T. L. Tally, owner of Tally's Broadway.

This is the home of all big visiting theatrical aggregations, where the nations' big stars have trod the boards, and it is hard for local people to believe that photoplays are to take the place of productions with such leads as E. H. Sothern, Julia Marlowe, Nat Goodwin, Gaby Deslys, William Hodge and others.

Mr. Morosco, in addition to the Majestic, had a lease on the Morosco Theatre, a smaller house, and also the Burbank, known as the west coast theatrical magnate's meal ticket, where stock company productions constitute almost all the offerings. The Morosco has a musical comedy stock company.

G. R. Ainsworth, former manager of the George Kleine film attractions, with offices in Pittsburgh, Pa., has purchased the Lyric theatre at Streator, Ill. He will take charge of the theatre on October 1.

Frank L. Glenn, Ray Harrington and Gordon Kaemmerling, of Erie, Pa., have purchased and taken possession of the Family Theatre in the amusement building at No. 28 Jackson street, Batavia, N. Y. The business was purchased from Miller & Knickerbocker and will be managed by Mr. Harrington and Mr. Kaemmerling.

MOVES OF EXCHANGE MEN ON THE COAST

Special to The Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Sept. 21.

M. Winik, who has been in charge of the local Apex Feature Service exchange, left this week for Seattle, where he will assist in opening an office for the company. Ernest Bru, who has been so connected with the San Francisco office of the company, is now in charge of the local branch.

A. L. Johnson has been transferred from the Seattle branch of Warner's Feature service to the Los Angeles exchange, and arrived in the Southern California city last week to take up his new duties.

Sam Norville, until recently connected with the Minneapolis exchange of the World Film Corporation, is now connected with the Los Angeles office, and will look after out of city business, giving Manager Louis E. Loeb more time to call on city patrons and attend to office details.

SHAKESPEARE'S LIFE IN FIVE REELS

Sawyer, Inc., announces that it has closed contracts with the Trans-Oceanic Films, Ltd., to handle its productions, "The Life of Shakespeare; His Intrigues and Romances" and "The Serial Scout."

The Shakespeare film is in five reels. The great bard's life was one long series of adventures, romances and intrigues, far surpassing the imagination of modern writers. The facts that history has brought down to us are so strikingly recorded in this picture, which will shortly be released.

"The Serial Scout," in two reels, is a thrilling story which might almost be called melodramatic. Certainly it holds interest every moment of the time.

MRS. FULLER VISITS WASHINGTON EXCHANGE

Special to The Motion Picture News

Washington, D. C., Sept. 22.

Mrs. Nora M. Fuller, of New Alexandria, Va., the mother of the popular star, Mary Fuller, was a recent visitor at the Universal Exchange.

She made herself known to the new manager, H. F. Lavelle, and inquired when the first release of her daughter with her new company would be expected in Washington.

Mrs. Fuller sees Mary in every role she creates and has naturally watched with a keener interest than her most ardent admirers the exceptional rise of this screen favorite.

PARIS THEATRES REOPEN

The theatres, cinemas and others, of Paris are reported to be gradually opening up again, now that the fear of an immediate siege by the German armies has passed. Big receipts are everywhere the reward of those exhibitors who have had the courage to resume business.

Another De Mille Joins Lasky Forces

William C., Known the Country Over as Playwright and Stage Director, Will Take Charge of Scenario Department at Hollywood

WILLIAM C. DE MILLE, one of the most successful playwrights of the decade, and for the last ten years a leading dramatic author and teacher, left New York Wednesday, September 23, for Hollywood, California, where he will become the head of the scenario department for the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, working in conjunction with his brother, Cecil B. De Mille, Artistic Director Wilfred Buckland, and Oscar Apfel.

WILLIAM C. DE MILLE

The calling in of William C. De Mille by the Lasky company portends another innovation in the field of motography, in that it will be the first time that a successful playwright, still in the heyday of his accomplishments, has renounced the stage for the film and again the first time a motion picture concern has had the courage to place their scenario department in the hands of one without previous motion picture experience.

But the fact that the Lasky concern has been successful and employed only well known and successful theatrical men in the various technical departments led Mr. Goldfish to consummate this arrangement with Mr. De Mille.

"We believe," said Mr. Goldfish, that Cecil De Mille, without any previous motion picture experience, proved beyond question of doubt that a man with the proper stage experience, the proper mental equipment and with sufficient imagination to create some dozen or more stage successes, is sufficently equipped to become a great motion picture creator—Cecil De Mille proved this.

"Now William De Mille, who has had as much, if not more success in the spoken drama than Cecil, and who is the originator of many stage successes and who possesses the proverbial 'De Mille' versatility and imagination, will take over the scenario department."

Some insight into the varied career of Mr. De Mille can be gotten from the following, taken from "Who's Who on the Stage":

Educated at Columbia University and a graduate of the University of Freiburg, Germany, Mr. De Mille's first stage success was "Strongheart," in which Robert Edeson made so great a hit. This production was written and staged by William De Mille.

"Classmates," another Edeson success, and "The Warrens of Virginia," which was produced by Belasco, was the fourth play written by De Mille, with "The Genius" and "The Land of the Free" following. "The Woman," produced two years ago by David Belasco with an all-star cast, is the most recent work of William De Mille.

Mr. De Mille collaborated with Prof. Brander Matthews at Columbia on many dramatic documents and lectured the classes there on dramatics. He was instructor at the Carnegie Hall dramatic school for three years and collaborated with Mr. Belasco on many prominent successes. Mr. De Mille, when he arrives at Los Angeles, will begin work on the scenario of his own play, "The Warrens of Virginia," but will not confine his work to his plays alone, for the Lasky company have arranged for the definite charge of their scenario department for Mr. De Mille.

In addition to Mr. De Mille, Wilfred Buckland, Richard Walton Tully (author of "The Bird of Paradise," "Omar, the Tentmaker," "The Rose of the Rancho"), Cecil De Mille and Oscar Apfel are in charge of various departments at the Lasky studios.

OWNER OF THREE THEATRES WANTS THREE MORE

Special to The Motion Picture News

San Jose, Cal., Sept. 21.

A. S. Winterhood, owner and manager of three downtown theatres at San Jose, is spending a couple of weeks in Los Angeles, taking a vacation and incidentally looking about for a good theatre or two.

He admits he will purchase three if the prices are right, locations good and attendance fair.

Mr. Winterhood is a very successful exhibitor and has three very profitable picture theatres. He is known for his enterprising methods.

FILM NEWS FROM FOREIGN PARTS

Theatres in Paris Hard Hit by the War—Women Doing All the Work While the Men Are at the Front—Patronage Consists Principally of English, Americans and South Americans—Business in Glasgow Not Affected by Conditions on the Continent

ALTHOUGH the war has hit the film business in England, the effect has been felt more in other lines of amusement, according to W. H. Scofield, of the Gloria American, who recently arrived from the other side.

He states that vaudeville and "legitimate" players have been compelled to accept less than half their former salaries, and are glad to get engagements even at that figure, so great has been the falling off in attendance at the British theatres on account of the hostilities.

At the same time, the public in its economical mood still feels the need of amusement. People go to the motion picture houses at a reasonable price who heretofore have been frequenters only of the playhouses putting on regular drama.

In the case of the usual picture patronage, this part of the amusement-going public seeks entertainment in places charging less. Those who could only afford the lowest price before the war have ceased patronizing pictures altogether.

THE high feeling against Germany is shown in the attitude of the English toward motion pictures manufactured in the Empire. A London newspaper learned that several such films had been brought into England through Holland by an importer whose patriotism was lost in the prospect of making money with reels he obtained cheap and expected to sell at a handsome profit.

This utter indifference to everything but an apparent chance to make money aroused the ire of the daily, which threatened to publish the name of the owner and also the names of any theatres daring to show the pictures.

Needless to say, no manager was intrepid enough to take chances of having an enraged populace tear down his house, even if he were not actuated by patriotic motives to refrain from putting on a picture he knew to be manufactured in a country at war with his own.

This anti-German sentiment manifested itself in the boycott of a theatre in the West End district known to be under the control of German capital. People shunned the place as if it were a pestilential swamp, and it had to close its doors.

Mr. Scofield declares that the film situation in Italy is at a standstill. None of the manufacturers is producing. In Milan, the biggest studio center of the kingdom, all the companies have been disbanded. This city is a point of embarkation for troops and now filled with soldiers waiting for orders.

THE film business in Paris is practically dead. The native population is in no mood to attend motion picture exhibitions. The attendance is confined to foreigners, Americans, South Americans, Italians and a few Englishmen.

This is quite natural, for with the exception possibly of the Britishers the war has not come home to the present seekers after amusement.

The high price seats are virtually empty, only the cheapest ones being occupied. The once gay city is cast in deep gloom, and the inhabitants seem to have lost their habitual vivacity.

With each report from the front the populace hangs eagerly on the outcome of the more momentous operations there, and have no time or inclination for amusement.

A touch of irony is found in the exhibition of one film getting vociferous applause in a picture house on the Boulevard St. Michel. The picture deals with certain events of the Franco-Prussian War, and portrays the valorous activity of the French soldiers.

THE people in the audience, however, are not aware of the fact that the film was manufactured in Germany and that the players are Germans. "A Frenchman's Pluck," the name of the film, was manufactured by the Messter Company in Berlin, and the part of the heroine, a Frenchwoman, is played by Fraulein Henny Porten.

Not only that, but as if fate laughing in her sleeve wanted to give the whole matter an additional home thrust, arranged it so that the agent in Paris who had introduced the picture to the French market was a German.

While the film takes so well in the Republic it is quite unnecessary to remark that on account of its sentiments the picture was put under the ban in the German Empire.

Paris exhibitors are exercising the most rigid economy. This is evident on every hand. For instance, there are no programs seen in the theatres. A solitary piano furnishes the music instead of orchestras. Half the usual number of lights are lit during a performance, and the force in each house has been reduced to the smallest possible number compatible with efficiency.

MEN are no longer seen at their accustomed duties. Women have taken their places. A typical example is shown in the management of another theatre on the Boulevard St. Michel. The wife of the proprietor, who is serving in his regiment, is in the projection booth, his daughter makes change at the box office, while another daughter, aged fourteen, is acting as "doorman." The women do all the menial work formerly performed by the porters, such as putting up the posters, washing the floors of the lobby and the auditorium. This is a typical case, illustrating conditions in the French capital.

It is reported that producers in France have decided not to release any new pictures while the war lasts, although they will probably continue to export negatives. Recently Mr. Bates, of the Eclipse Company, took a large consignment of negatives from Paris to London for the Selig and Urbanora companies.

IN the city of Glasgow and its environs the motion picture houses have experienced the best business since the beginning of the industry. The war has had anything but a depressing effect on the attendance of the theatres in this section of Scotland.

The exhibitors were foresighted enough to put on timely "war" films calculated to appeal to patriotic sentiments, and the halls have been packed as a consequence. This applies to the theatres in the suburbs and those right in the heart of the city. It is stated that the business has eclipsed the box office receipts of the corresponding year by a large figure.

In Glasgow benefit performances to raise money for the Prince of Wales fund have proved highly satisfactory. The people responded loyally to the appeal made to their patriotism. At the Cathcart Picture House a special program was put on for the occasion. It is expected that every motion picture theatre in the city will set apart one day for the purpose of raising money for the fund.

One hundred pounds have been contributed to the Lord Provost of Glasgow's fund by the management of La Scala. The money will be sent to the fund of the Prince of Wales.

At this house a popular innovation was recently inaugurated. It consisted of a vocal quartette, which while an important part of the entertainment, does not interfere with the picture schedule.

LOS ANGELES THEATRE SOLD

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Los Angeles, Sept. 21.

The Federal theatre, Main and Temple streets, Los Angeles, has been sold to A. Borst, who took possession September 14.

The new owner has already made plans for a number of improvements of the house, which has a seating capacity of about three hundred.

Montreal Business Recovers From War Fever

Exhibitors Continued to Run Features in August, Although There Was a Free Counter Attraction of Troops Filling the Streets on the Way to the Front and War Pictures Projected Across One of the Main Thoroughfares by a Newspaper

Special to The Motion Picture News

Montreal, Sept. 23.

"THANK Heaven that the shouting is all over," said one prominent exhibitor, when I asked him how he liked showing pictures during war times, and that seems to be the opinion all the way round.

When you have thousands of people marching through the streets waving flags and shouting themselves hoarse, when you have regiment after regiment of soldiers parading from headquarters, getting ready for the stern business of protecting their flag, when you have bulletin boards all over the city with the latest war news, it does not require much thought to appreciate the fact that the motion picture houses have had to face a very strong counter attraction.

Added to this was the free show of war pictures by a leading newspaper projected across one of the main avenues on Montreal's Broadway.

Business generally, therefore, during August was poor. But it is improving steadily now "that the shouting is over," and the people have recovered their balance. Exhibitors were very quick to take advantage of any possible pulling force.

THE more prominent ones made arrangements with the local newspapers to have the war bulletins flashed to them, and anything important was at once shown upon the screen, while there was a general demand for any war picture which by its nature could be introduced with effect.

For instance, the films "The British Army," produced under the auspices of the British Army Council, the British Navy, the Warner feature, "The Battling British," the great Canadian camp at Petawawa, and later still the boys who are going to the front in training at Valcartier, all did great business, while the various film weeklies giving pictures of war times in Belgium and elsewhere are good drawing cards.

One good point I noticed during this period of depression, and that was the refusal of the leading exhibitors to cut down on any of their features.

Just as good a show was given then as now. As one manager said to me, "I only just about broke even during August, but I was determined that those who did support me should have just as much for their money as in the days when I have standing room only."

Montreal exhibitors are to be congratulated on taking this enterprising view. The exchanges generally state that they have not been hurt by the war excitement.

THEY were of course covered by existing contracts, and by the aforesaid determination of leading exhibitors to maintain the high quality of their pictures. As one exchange manager said, "The censors hit us a great deal harder than the war."

There is one consolation in the fact that a general improvement of business is noted by exhibitors, and the only dark cloud, though there is nothing to be gained by looking for it, is the possibility of increased financial stringency through the prolongation of the war, and its effect upon the community.

It may be safe to fool some of the public, but it is evident that the case is different with soldiers, or at least those who are going to the front.

At the great military camp at Valcartier, Que., where at present some 30,000 men from all over Canada are getting into their stride preparatory to going to war, a motion picture operator had pitched his tent.

HE was doing fine business, but unfortunately he neglected to change his films often enough. Indignation commenced to grow over this little neglectfulness of the exhibitor and it culminated this week in the audience taking the situation into their own hands.

A frontal attack, aided by a tactical flanking move, was made upon the tent poles. They gave way beneath the onslaught and the whole tent came to the ground, burying underneath it a portion of the audience.

After they escaped, flames were seen completing the job. A prompt retreat saved the exhibitor and his lantern, but everything else was destroyed. Next time this exhibitor will make certain that there are no soldiers going to the front in his audience.

It is generally admitted that Mr. Kashin, of the London Theatre, Montreal, is a live wire. Taking the London when it was rapidly losing money, Mr. Kashin by judicious advertising, and a keen perception of what will pull the people and what won't, has done wonders with his theatre.

IN fact, record houses somewhat pall upon him now. The only fear his patrons have is that, like Alexander, he will sigh for fresh fields to conquer. Mr. Kashin, who is a live advertiser, recently had a model of the New York Hippodrome driven through the streets, and also secured a place for it in the big procession on Labor Day.

Extension of Time for Film Shippers

Commerce Commission Grants Until March 1, 1915, for Change of Film Cases to Form Approved by Statute

CHIEF INSPECTOR B. W. DUNN, of the New York City Bureau of Explosives, has sent out the following notice to the motion picture industry:

"The Bureau of Explosives is authorized by the Interstate Commerce Commission to notify parties interested, that the Commission has approved an extension of time from October 1, 1914, with relation to the requirements of paragraph 43 of the Regulations for the Transportation of Explosives and Other Dangerous Articles by Express. This paragraph as amended reads as follows:

> 43. (a) Moving-picture films must be packed in tightly closed metal cases inclosed in a strong, spark-proof wooden box; or in spark-proof cases made of sheet iron not less than 0.02 inch thick (No. 25 U. S. standard gauge) and lined throughout with fiber board at least ⅛ inch thick, or some other equivalent insulating material. The covers of these cases must fit tightly and must lap over the body at least ⅝ inch on the sides, forming a tight joint.
> Note:—Strong, spark-proof vulcanized hard fiber cases made of fiber not less than .070 of an inch in thickness, reinforced by metal at the corners, purchased prior to October 1, 1914, may be used until March 1, 1915, for the shipment of moving picture films enclosed in interior spark-proof metal cases.

"It will be observed that by the addition of the foregoing note, shippers will be permitted to use their present supply of hard fiber cases with interior metal cans until March 1, 1915. This, therefore, provides three alternative methods of packing:

> 1st. In securely closed metal cans in wooden boxes.
> 2nd. In metal cases lined with fiber constructed as indicated above.
> 3rd. Until March 1, 1915, in hard fiber cases which must be strong and spark-proof and of not less than .070 inch in thickness with corners of the cases reinforced with metal, the films enclosed in interior spark-proof metal cans.

"The attention of shippers is invited to the necessity of offering to express carriers only those cases which comply with the requirements."

Vol. X October 3, 1914 No. 13

The Wrong Way to "Come Back"

AT the convention of the International Motion Picture Association in New York City, June 8-13, Samuel Bullock, of Cleveland, O., announced on the floor of the convention that, out of 846 exhibitors in the state of Ohio canvassed by the Cleveland Photoplay Exhibitors Board of Trade, only two were not in favor of the repeal of the Ohio State Censorship law.

At the convention of the Ohio State League, held at Columbus, September 15 and 16, more than fifty-five of the sixty odd exhibitors present were ready to endorse the state censorship law.

A resolution nearly went through the convention in favor of that law, and was only blocked by the determined opposition of the five dissenting exhibitors.

IT was a prettily contrived scheme on the part of M. A. Neff—the first step, perhaps, in the return of the would-be Napoleon from Elba.

When THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS undertook to expose the inner working of the censorship law which Neff had foisted on the Ohio exhibitors, Neff's repeated assertion was:

"The law is what the majority of the Ohio exhibitors wanted."

HE continued to repeat it—until the Board of Trade began to amass unanswerable facts.

Then he tried to block the disastrous canvass by edicts forbidding League members to reply to the Board of Trade questions. And the replies continued to pour in.

Ever since that time Neff has been scheming to get some official endorsement of the despised and rejected law which he had fathered and framed.

With that endorsement he could parade up and down the state and the country, and persuade the gullible and the ill-informed to swallow his platitudes and sophistries.

THE state convention was his opportunity—or so he thought—and he seized upon it.

The number that attended shows how he picked the members with the care a hostess of the "400" would show in making up her invitation list.

To the credit of the five men whom he could not or dared not exclude, or upon whose pliability he mistakenly relied, be it said that the whole scheme collapsed about Neff's head.

Instead of the endorsement he craved, Neff had to solace himself with the rather bitter honor of heading a grievance committee whose duty was to receive the complaints of the exhibitors against the censors whom he expected his followers to "love, honor and obey."

ONE glance over the record of the Ohio censor board will lead the unprejudiced spectator to ask what possible excuse an intelligent exhibitor could have for endorsing them or their works.

Efficiency?

Their unpardonable delay in not having leaders ready for the exchange on September 1, after having had three months in which to prepare for the day the law went into effect, is enough to dispose of their claims to efficiency.

Public spiritedness?

The size of their expense bills during the late spring, for which they were publicly reprimanded even by their associates on the Industrial Commission, was hardly in keeping with their roles as public servants.

Fair-mindedness?

The charge a Cincinnati exchange man brought against them at the Columbus Convention that Vestal and his fellows had refused point-blank to explain why they cut or rejected any particular film is a striking comment on the high-handedness of their methods.

Add to this, the vicious practice of judging a film by the hurried reading of a synopsis, and the drumhead court-martial seems a model of equity, compared to such farcical procedure.

NEFF has not even the excuse that the censor law is his only achievement to dignify his "spare-my-chee-ild" attitude toward the miserable measure. He might recollect that he will be praised for his efforts in behalf of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League, when men, in the same breath, will execrate him for his part in bringing the censor board into being.

Were he to devote one-half the time to the interests of the League that he does to repairing his shattered prestige, he would regain that prestige far more quickly and surely than he ever will in any other way.

In and Out of Los Angeles Studios

Special to The Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, Sept. 21.

THE Usona Film Company, of Glendale, producing under the direction of Burton King, is now most commonly called the "mystery film company" by Los Angeles motion people folks—they cannot understand what is to be done with all the pictures being made.

Mr. King began producing early in January and continues to make a reel or two each week. Up to last Saturday forty-four reels were completed, and all but two of the subjects were of one reel.

"The pictures are not being injured by age," the director said when asked concerning the release, "and when the first picture appears under the Usona brand it will be a surprise to many. We have a release but conditions do not at this time warrant announcement."

No Truth in "Closed" Rumor

The one reel pictures consist of eighty to one hundred scenes and all but two or three are dramas of a heart interest character. Among the members of the producing company are Edward Brady, Robyn Adair, Virginia Kirtley, Lillian Hamilton and Eugenia Forde and all fear their friends will forget them because of their absence from the screen for so many months.

War scares are numerous among the members of the Los Angeles motion picture colony and during the past week—according to rumors—no less than fifteen companies have been "closed." The real facts are, however, that not a one has been discontinued.

In the Universal studio it was related that two companies—that of Harry Edwards, making Joker comedy, and Joseph DeGrasse, making Rex dramas—have been discontinued. Harry Edwards was transferred to the L. K. O. release and DeGrasse is continuing with his work.

From Glendale came the story that the Usona company studio was closed down. This rumor is credited by Director Burton King to scenario writers whom he has informed that he could not use their scrips because of the war.

Because of the absence of Managing Director Wilbert Melville, of the Western Lubin studio, who went to New York to purchase a 240-foot yacht, which he is bringing to Los Angeles via the Panama Canal, the studio is temporarily closed.

Members of the Albuquerque Film Company are having a vacation because of the absence of Managing Director Gilbert P. Hamilton, who is in New York on business connected with the release of the company's products.

Through the Paramount Pictures Corporation the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company will release, on October 12, its second production, in which the prominent dramatic star, Robert Edeson, appears, "Where the Trail Divides,"

THEODORE ROBERTS, WINIFRED KINGSTON AND ROBERT EDESON IN "WHERE THE TRAIL DIVIDES"
(Lasky-Paramount Feature)

which as a stage play was one of the most successful of the Henry B. Harris enterprises and always considered by Mr. Edeson as his most attractive parts.

The drama, in which Robert Edeson plays the role of "How" Lander, an Indian, educated at Carlyle, and married to a white woman, is a typical story of the protestations of the white against the marrying of one of their kind to a red man, the struggles of the Indian when his white wife's sentiments turn toward another of her own race, and of the ultimate return to her redman husband of the woman.

Mr. Edeson will have the support of Winifred Kingston, Theodore Roberts and a select cast of players. It is in five parts and said to possess over three hundred scenes.

Old-Time Star Celebrates Birthday

Billie West, Wallace Reid and Al Filson played prominent parts in the filming of "His Mother's Last Word," a one-reel heart interest picture produced by John B. O'Brien, for Majestic release on the Mutual program.

This will picture the experiences of a disinherited son of a millionaire, who weds his father's stenographer and by preventing the robbery of the father brings about a reconciliation.

Jennie Lee, who thirty years ago scored a noteworthy success as star in the stage production of Dickens' "Bleak House" in America and England, now character woman at the Majestic studio, celebrated her sixty-fifth birthday anniversary September 4, and all members of the stock company, including Director General D. W. Griffith, took part in making the day a very happy one for her. Miss Lee is taking part in the production of "The Clansman."

"Mr. Noad's Adless Day," a comedy by James Dayton, being produced by J. G. Blystone and his Joker brand players at the Universal, gives the experience of the business man who thought only of his own comfort and being besieged by advertising solicitors daily, wished the world would be free from advertising.

In a dream he sees it so and the conditions are a revelation to him. Every wait-for-'em-to-come-by-the-lobby exhibitor should book this picture if for no other reason than the good that it will do him to see it.

O'Hagan Story in Films

A. E. Lowery is playing the name role in "Bad Man Mason," adapted from the story of that name by Anne O'Hagan, which appeared in "Munsey's Magazine." Frank Bennett and Florence Crawford have prominent parts and the directing is by Arthur Mackley. The story portrays western life, and is for the Reliance brand of the Mutual program.

Francis Ford and Grace Cunard are playing leads in a two-reeler, "The Mystery of the Throne Room," written by the latter. This is a story of international diplomatic marriages in which Miss Cunard, by the aid of double exposures, plays a dual role.

Francelia Billington is being featured in a two-reel Jack Adolfi Reliance drama, "A Blotted Page," in which Sam De Grasse and W. E. Lawrence are cast. The picture is from the short story of the same name by Elizabeth De Jeans. In this an estranged couple are reunited in time to prevent the husband from taking his life.

"The Star of the Sea," from a scenario by Phil Walsh for two reels, in which Pauline Bush and William Dowlan are featured, is being produced under the direction of Joseph De Grasse for the Universal program.

It is a story of a young sculptor who suceeds. His greatest work, a statue of The Madonna, is about to be destroyed by a jealous couple, when it comes to life—in the minds of the man and woman ready to destroy it.

For this a number of very beautiful pieces of statuary have been made at the U papier mache factory. The settings will be very expensive and the picture will be one of the features of the program in the near future.

Second Oz Picture

The Oz Film Company is completing the filming of the second five-reel picture, "The Mysterious Cloak of Oz," from one of the twenty-six fairy stories by J. Frank Baum. In this Violette MacMillon is featured, and like the first production. "The Patchwork Girl of Oz," abounds in beautiful settings and fairy-like atmosphere. "His Majesty, The Scarecrow of Oz" will next be filmed. In this Frank Moore will play the title role and Fred Woodward will impersonate nine different "animuels."

Director Donald Crisp, of the Majestic Motion Picture Company, is daily expecting a call to the colors. During the Boer war Mr. Crisp served and entering as a private he was promoted to the office of color sergeant for his bravery.

He received two wounds. This week Mr. Crisp is directing a two-reel picture, "Sands of Fate," in which Dorothy Gish is featured. Other members of the producing company are Robert Harron, R. A. Walsh and Cora Drew. The picture is being filmed on the desert north of Los Angeles.

Fred A. Kelsey, director at the R-M studio, is under the spell of a hoodoo his friends believe. Several weeks ago in making an explosion scene he destroyed about a thousand dollars worth of pipe and irrigation equipment.

Active Baby in Komic Play

Imagine this—Eddie Dillon, Fay Tincher, Tod Browning and Tam Young (laugh-makers for the Komic-Mutual brand), trying to sooth a screaming, fretful infant photoplayer, age nine months, having its first attack of artistic temperament.

The child was used in the production of "The Million Dollar Bride," and was one of the principal characters. For two days the youngster behaved beautifully, and then came the attack.

The comedy makers were then able to secure just the proper registration with no urging or petting or soothing. Dillon now claims that for two nights in succession he was Mr. Newlywed.

Frank C. Griffin, former director of the Lubin Jacksonville company, is the new director at the Sterling Motion Picture Company studio, where he began the production of his first picture last week. In this Max Asher played lead, and among other stunts feigned suicide. By a prearrangement with the undertaker he is buried in order to see if his sweetheart actually cares for him or "the other feller."

Bosworth, Inc., during the coming year will make twenty features under the management of Hobart Bosworth himself as managing director, aided by other directors, including Phillips Smalley and Lois Weber. This company has the exclusive right to C. E. Van Loan's stories and will produce them at once.

It has also engaged the English actor Courtenay Foote. Margaret Edwards will be featured, in addition to other

MYRTLE STEDMAN

Bosworth stars, including Mr. Bosworth, Phillips Smalley, Lois Weber, Myrtle Stedman, Rhea Haines, Helen Woolcott and many others.

Adele Farrington, the comedienne, will appear on the screen in feature comedies in some of her stage successes, for Bosworth, Inc.

In addition, Bosworth will film several stories by Lois Weber. One of Miss Weber's plays soon to be released through the Paramount Program, by Bosworth, is "The Hypocrites"—a production with double, triple and sextuple exposures never before attempted.

Mr. Bosworth also has in preparation two original dramas, affording full opportunity to display his screen acting. A play is also being written for Courtenay Foote.

Not only is Bosworth already renowned for remarkable photography, but for the accuracy with which scenarios and scenes are produced. One of the Bosworth companies is now being sent to the South Sea Islands to make Jack London's South Sea Island stories on the exact locations described, but whether the story be of Siberia, Australia, Alaska or those scenes nearer home which portray the beauties of our beloved western country at their best, Bosworth aims at an accuracy and perfection in detail which may well be said to be critic-proof.

As the players in Louis Joseph Vance's "Trey o' Hearts" series draw closer to the thirteenth installment of the serial, a nervous tension that does not admit of explanation is beginning to make itself more plainly felt. Each member of Mr. Lucas' Gold Seal company insists that he is not superstitious, but as the ill-omened number approaches, the feeling of uneasiness steadily becomes more evident. There seems to be a presentiment that if they can pass that chapter without serious mishap, all will be well.

An incident that for the moment threatened to end the series tragically, occurred recently in the staging of the tenth installment. That the players escaped with only one of them receiving a minor injury is due perhaps to the quick action of Tom Walsh, who is playing in the part of Barcus.

A Human Chain for the Heroine

According to the scenario, Mr. Walsh and Mr. Larkin form of their bodies a human chain suspended from a trestle down which Miss Madison slides to escape being crushed in the wreck of two trains on the bridge. The chain worked perfectly and all parties dropped to temporary safety below the bridge, but just as Mr. Walsh struck the ground, the two trains crashed together overhead. From the corner of his eye, he saw something topple off the bridge above them.

Without waiting to see what it was, he lunged forward throwing Miss Madison out of the way. A fraction of a second later the ground trembled as the rear trucks of the caboose struck in the spot where they had been standing.

Miss Madison and Mr. Larkin escaped uninjured, but a loose piece of timber struck Walsh on the arm. A hasty examination by the physician who always accompanied the players on their trips away from the studio, showed that the arm, though badly bruised, was not broken.

Walsh's face was pretty white but he shut his teeth together and went back to work rather than hold up the production.

"Bill, the Office Boy"

Later he lost the camera off his automobile while rushing to the hospital with an injured boy, and a suit case containing several costumes, the property of Irene Hunt. Recently while filming "The Revenue Officer's Deputy," at Newhall, Cal., he left a silver mounted Mexican saddle, rented in Los Angeles, in a barn and during the night the barn was destroyed. He is now directing the filming of "The Wrong Prescription," and

"SUCH A LITTLE QUEEN"

(Famous Players—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE four words of the title voice the opinion of thousands of motion picture-goers, in regard to the charming little heroine of this production, Mary Pickford. Words are practically inadequate to describe her, as she appears here, but both in the picture and in real life she is just "Such a Little Queen."

But the picture, which is the product of the brain of Channing Pollock, does more than boast the presence of this little lady. It might be defined as a romantic comedy-drama, producing heartiest and enthusiastic laughs in scores of places, yet through all there is an underlying touch of romance, and almost of pity, on the spectators' part, for her majesty, who is forced for political reasons to flee to America.

Mary Pickford's name and her appearance in the title role, would almost be enough to insure any picture success, but when she appears in a part, fitting exactly her individual personality, and when that part is surrounded by a delightful story, far out of the ordinary, nothing remains to be perfected.

Supporting the star is Carlyle Blackwell, as the Bosnian prince, who for political reasons is also forced to flee his kingdom. Russell Bassett, as the proud prime minister calls for many a roar of laughter, when he is placed in the same serio-humorous situation as his mistress. Harold Lockwood as a typical American business man, appears in a role well suited to him. Arthur Hoops as Prince Eugene, the only heavy of the play, has a small part. The rest of the cast enact their parts excellently, and together with the principals form a remarkably well balanced picture.

Purely by chance, the two kingdoms are Herzegovina and Bosnia, and scenes actually taken in these lands, now in the toils of war, create added color. The Famous Players have always been noted for the superiority of their photography and grandeur of their sets, but they seem to have surpassed themselves here, as photographically the picture is par excellence. The depth and gorgeousness of the scenes are truly marvelous.

From the time that the two royal heads, accompanied by the prime minister, arrive in America, penniless, and suffer all the tortures of a Harlem flat, the dumbwaiter, the iceman, the landlady, and even the pawnshop, until they return to their respective kingdoms, the picture keeps one in a fine humor and calls for a good deal of laughter, punctuated by a few more serious scenes.

And when they are home, none the worse for their experiences, and perhaps a little Americanized, and when the little queen finally gives her hand and heart to the king, ending the story, one who has witnessed the production, will go away much impressed by it, and more than likely by Mary Pickford.

"THE MILLION DOLLAR MYSTERY"

(Thanhouser—Thirteenth Episode)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

THERE has not been an abundance of humor in the search for the million dollars that disappeared from the house of Hargreaves, but the thirteenth episode, which is called "The Secret Agent from Russia," ends with a really funny situation, that gives a touch of variety to the almost inevitable sameness of a long series like this.

The headquarters of the Black Hundred in Russia send over a secret agent to take charge of the Hargreaves affair. He arrives on the scene of action and at once takes supreme command of the doings of the conspirators. In the meantime the Countess Olga, who knows nothing of the arrival of the Russian, pays a visit to Florence and when the latter goes out of the room for a minute, the Countess reads her letter which purports to be from her father and directs where she is to meet him.

The Countess changes Florence's clock and keeps the engagement with full confidence that she will land the traitor to the Black Hundred. A man appears looking extremely like the father of Florence, and the two go off together.

But there is where the funny part comes in. The man thrusts the girl roughly into the room and exclaims that here is the person they have sought so long. The woman yells that they have Hargreaves in their power. But when the disguises are removed, the Countess stands facing the secret agent from Russia, amid the sneers of the rest of the gang.

"THE PATCHWORK GIRL OF OZ"

(Oz Film—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

NOT many of us are liable to forget the whimsical creations of L. Frank Baum's imagination, from which has emanated many a mythical tale, primarily for the amusement of children, but equally entertaining for the mature mind.

His books, among which are "The Patchwork Girl of Oz," "The Wonderful Wizard of Oz" and "Princess Ozma of Oz," will remain as monuments to his name.

In the visualization of "The Patchwork Girl of Oz," a decided departure from the traditional comedy is established. And not only the young but the older class as well will take great pleasure in witnessing this untiring and unconventional fantasy of Mr. Baum's.

THE PATCHWORK GIRL IS THROWN INTO WOOZY'S DEN

Heralds distributed with the picture define it as a "whimsical extravaganza," and no more appropriate compliment or definition could be allotted it. There is an abundance of artistic, elaborate and beautiful scenes, set off by fine photography, the characters are arrayed in picturesque garments, belonging to some imaginary period, and, best of all, there is a wealth of pretty girls, as many as ever were gathered in one picture, and it may candidly be said they are not at all timid about displaying their charms.

This is the first release of the Oz Film Company, and an excellent initial production it makes, to be followed by "The Magic Cloak of Oz," a picture of the same variety. This, the first, is released through Paramount Pictures Corporation.

A collection of remarkably clever artists have been gathered together under the direction of J. Farrell MacDonald. Violet MacMillan as Ojo, a Munchin boy, who is searching for several ingredients with which to bring her guardian (Frank Moon) back to the world of the living, from a petrified state, makes a charming young boy.

Scraps, the Patchwork Girl, brought to life by Dr. Pipt, a magician, played by Raymond Russell, is played by an actor, M. Coudrec, who makes here his first American appearance. He is very clever and exhibits remarkable skill as a tumbler and acrobat.

The Woozy, a queer animal with a cat-like face, who is modeled "on the square," is played by Frank Woodward. He and Scraps will furnish many a laugh. Others who furnish added amusement are Mlle. Dranet, Miss Bobby Gould, Dick Rosson, Frank Bristol and Marie Wayne, besides the number of charming girls whose names are not known.

Trick photography, original ideas, the beautiful scenes, and the novelty of the entire production, all combine to cause the picture to be one that will be heartily enjoyed and long talked about.

"LOVE AND BASEBALL"

(Imp-Universal—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

IN which Christy Mathewson, the renowned baseball star, makes his debut as a motion picture actor, in the ranks of the Universal Film Company. His appearance in this series of pictures, one of which is to be released every month for the period of one year, has been heralded and talked about for a great length of time, and now at last "the old reliable" is put on the film for the benefit of his many admirers.

To say that this picture and the ones that are to follow it will be a success is entirely superfluous. There is not a fan in the country, be he of the motion picture or baseball variety, that will not welcome this chance to see so great an idol, and to see him actually leading the cast.

Renowned men have appeared on the screen before, advertised as playing the leading role, taking part in ninety-nine out of a hundred scenes, and then when the spectator enters the theatre expecting to see the gentleman so extensively advertised—what awaits him? The renowned personage, true, but seated at a desk, perhaps, favoring the camera with a benevolent smile, and taking part in a few scenes.

But here it is different, Matty is the hero of the story, Matty is the star, Matty is the lover, the central figure of an entertaining tale, which combines humor and dramatic situations in delightful proportions.

In a word, Matty is himself, yet he plays an assumed part but still retains his real character. True, he is not an excellent actor, but it is more than likely his name will well overtop his dramatic shortcomings, be they noticed.

UPBRAIDED FOR HIS SPORTING NATURE

Apropos of baseball, the first scene shows Matty affixing his "John Hancock" to one of Manager Stern's contracts. Then the story starts. He gets a job with his sweetheart's father, but his experience there is short lived.

One day while teaching his associates the art of "fade-away," his ball, of newspaper, connects with a customer's high hat, which ends his bookkeeping career.

He then returns to the carefree pastime of pitching for the "gang," until a big league scout sees him and soon after he is bedecked with a New York uniform. On the day of his first appearance at the Polo Grounds, his old fellow workers, all pull the "dead grandmother" trick on the boss and repair to the game.

Actual scenes of the Polo Grounds are shown with a game in progress, and his sweetheart is seen wildly cheering him, as he wins his first big league assignment.

The producers have not gone amiss in putting on a film starring a noted baseball player. The public has been in the right mood for a long time to accept such a picture. As everybody, from boys "knee high to a grasshopper" to venerable men, are interested in the game. "Love and Baseball" will make a hit.

"THE SECOND DOOR LEFT"

REVIEWED BY CLIFFORD H. PANGBURN

THIS is a comedy in the French style. While there is little of an uproariously humorous nature in the film there is no lack of entertainment. Although a minor character the orchestra leader is the most striking figure in the production.

Not only does his hair hang well down his back, but he goes through some of the most extraordinary sort of gyrations in the course of guiding his musicians. It is said that the part was taken by a real orchestra leader in France, who is all that he appears in the film.

The story deals with the troubles of a young man who had to marry off his two girl cousins in one month in order to come into a large property offered him by an old uncle, who is unknown to him. He goes to call on the girls but by a mistake in the elevator gets off at the wrong floor and finds himself in the apartment of two very gay chorus girls.

They see a chance for some fun and pretend to be bashful and innocent young persons. The nephew takes them to a matrimonial agency, where it happens the wealthy uncle has also gone looking for a wife. He sizes up the girls at once and they think he looks like ready money.

The nephew to the secret enjoyment of the old uncle resents what he supposes to be the undue familiarity of the old beau towards the girls.

Various complications ensue and meantime the nephew meets and falls in love with one of the real cousins while a friend of his wants to marry the other. On the last day of the month they are married and the scheming chorus girls are frustrated.

"DOC"

(Sawyer—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

ELEANOR GATES proved her mastery of dramatic construction in her play, "The Poor Little Rich Girl." She proves that she is no less an adept in writing a scenario for motion picture production, for in "Doc," based on her story in the Saturday Evening Post, we have all the requirements for a successful photoplay, human appeal, stirring action, potent dramatic situations, and suspended interest.

Some of the stage settings are admirable in their appropriateness. The play opens with a scene in the quarry owned by Mr. Eastman, where Bill Travers, the villain of the piece, works.

The pictures must have been made of a real quarry, so absolutely realistic is the plant in every detail of machinery and operation. Much of the plausibiilty of the story depends upon the wildness and inaccessibility of the country about the quarry; otherwise one would be inclined to question how the villain got away up in the mountains and could not be found.

But the rugged and rough country, overgrown with undergrowth, which is pictured, makes this seem entirely plausible.

Bill Travers and his pal are discharged by Mr. Eastman because of drunkenness and worthlessness. In revenge, they steal his little daughter and carry her off to a cabin in the hills. The doctor is called in to minister to the mother, who is ill from the shock. He suspects something but doesn't know what is wrong with her.

He gets a strange call from Bill Travers, and is carried off to the mountain retreat to give what aid he can to the wounded pal. But he is blindfolded and cannot learn the way. On the second visit he discovers the child. He informs the sheriff and when Bill returns to the settlement, he is nabbed.

THE LOVERS TOGETHER

The horse, Dolly, has to be depended upon to lead the doctor and the father to where the child is concealed, but the faithful mare performs all that is expected of her. The little girl is restored to her mother, Doc is offered a fine place as physician to the quarry, and is fixed so that he can marry Letty, his sweetheart and owner of Dolly.

Sidney Seaward plays the part of Doc in totally acceptable fashion; Regina Richards is pleasing as Letty; Cyril Chadwick as Mr. Eastman, and Vivian Blackburn as his wife are convincing in their portrayals of parental affection and suffering; and Herbert Boswick as Bill Travers is as villainous looking as one could wish.

"AS THE WIND BLOWS"

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

FRANK LLOYD is responsible for this entertaining drama. Under his direction, assisted by the capable acting of Anna Little, Herbert Rawlinson and William Worthington, he has turned a comparatively conventional story into one that seems almost new and which is certainly delightfully refreshing to see.

Herbert Rawlinson forsakes his role of hero for a time and appears in this picture as the heavy, although it is hardly fair to call him such, as he does nothing to arouse the antagonism of the spectators. But the character impersonated by William Worthington is the real hero of the tale, and the actor makes a very fine hero.

Miss Little as the stenographer is forced to marry her employer to save her good-for-nothing father.

Later the other man returns, hears tales of how his one time sweetheart is neglected by her husband, who in reality loves her, but wishes to give her grounds for divorce, thinking his love is unrequited. Her illness, followed by a fire from which she is rescued by her husband, brings about a perfect understanding.

"DAMAGED GOODS"

(American—Seven Reels)

REVIEWED BY C. J. VERHALEN

A STRONGER or more forceful lesson could not be taught than in this seven reel production. It may be considered gruesome in parts, but nevertheless this makes it so much more convincing. There is nothing left undone to pound home the argument which it sets out to give. The story is tensely interesting, and the characters well selected.

Richard Bennett and many of those who appeared with him in the translation of the stage production lend their efforts in the interpretation of this play for the film.

THINKING OF THE FUTURE

It is agreed that the acting is just as splendid, but that the photoplay is much more forceful, convincing and more complete than was the play itself.

A greater amount of necessary detail is brought out. That which is merely inferred in the play is actually seen in the motion picture. The thousands of spoken lines in the play are given life, and in many other ways the picture shows its superiority over the stage production.

That which will be considered the most interesting, though the most gruesome, part of the picture is the actual hospital scenes taken of patients suffering from blood poisoning, showing the different ways the disease makes itself apparent, its effect on the different parts of the body.

There are several splendid punches in the production that lead up to strong situations. The scenic effects are well selected. An especially striking scene is the exterior giving a view of the garden overlooking the ocean.

A great many titles are part of the spoken lines of the play.

Some of the regular American Players recognized in the cast were Mrs. Lester, John Steppling and Charlotte Burton. Bennett is to be commended not only for his splendid acting, but also because at no time did he make the mistake so many legitimate players make when appearing before the camera, that is looking at the camera.

George Dupont, who has always lead a studious life, graduates in law at the head of his class. He returns home and comes under the bad influence of a married woman, the wife of a family friend. He becomes entangled with a seamstress; and is influenced by his rich aunt and his mother to become engaged to a Senator's daughter, his boyhood chum.

He is left a fortune by his aunt and taken into partnership by the senator. He becomes intoxicated at a farewell dinner given by his friends and goes with a friend to the apartment of the latter and there meets a wayward girl.

Four weeks later he discovers he has contracted a dread blood disease. He is about to commit suicide when prevented by the girl. He is about to kill her when he realizes what he is doing. The girl tells how she was wronged, and her determination to have her revenge on society, and how she was finally cured by a doctor.

George consults this same specialist and is forbidden to marry under two years. This doesn't suit him as his wedding is announced, so he consults a quack doctor who guarantees to cure him in three months.

He marries; a baby is born. He realizes the great crime he has committed when the disease shows on the child. He walks to the arch on the seaside where he first learned the great secret of an expected child and calmly walks into the sea, the waters closing over his head.

"THE TREY O' HEARTS"

(Gold-Seal-Universal—Ninth Chapter)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

CONTRARY to many of its predecessors this episode of the "Trey o' Hearts" begins with the same scene which put an end to the eighth installment. The fire from which Law rescued Rose is still raging and after a few moments the whole building collapses.

The spectator is given a glimpse of William Clifford, leading man of the 101 Bison Company, who assumes the small role of reporter, and is eagerly collecting material for what promises to be a big story.

Trine's party, seeing that the plan to kill Rose by fire has failed, turn their attentions once more to Law, and tell the police that he set fire to the building. Law breaks away, but is hotly pursued by the officers.

Coming to the river bank he climbs into the dizzy heights of the rigging on a docked ship. Still being pursued he takes a thrilling leap into the water.

The police then give up the chase, and Law is picked up by a passing hydroaeroplane. This feat is executed with great difficulty and must have worried George Larkin, as the aircraft fails to plane in the correct manner the first time, and has to circle away, coming up again, which time the feat is accomplished successfully.

After this, Trine at the suggestion of Marrophat, sets out for the West, on a special train, taking Rose with him, but Judith is left behind. Barcus, Law's former captain, disguises himself as the colored porter on Trine's train, first leaving his destination with his master, who joins forces with Judith and pursues the train in an aeroplane.

They reach a small station which the special has just passed, and Law manages to hire an engine by showing his card to the yard master, and then pursues the train.

They rapidly gain on the special, and Barcus realizing that his master is pursuing the train, throws Red November, the gunman, off, and then as the engine comes within a foot of the rear car he and Rose climb on.

Trine and Marrophat are furious but are unable to do anything at all, as the engine is brought to a halt and the passengers alight.

"THE PERILS OF PAULINE"

(Eclectic—Fourteenth Episode)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

SMALL wonder is it that this recurrent picture has gained such popular and wide-spread interest, as the feats of daring allotted to Pearl White and Crane Wilbur are most thrilling and unusual.

One would think that after continuing for fourteen installments, the supply of spine tinglers would be exhausted, but such is not the case. Each episode offers scenes that are distinctly vivid and realistic, and that vie in regard to the effect created with those that have gone before.

Something else, which no doubt accounts for the popularity of Pauline and her aides, is the vigorous, whole-hearted way and finished manner with which they go about every scene, giving the appearance of real people in real life more than actors assuming the parts.

At the end of these two reels Owen is so sure that Pauline and Harry are out of his way forever that he starts to run over the books of the estate and assume the general attitude of master of the domain, but his plans and hopes are dashed to pieces when he discovers that the lovers have not yet been destroyed as he had thought.

At the outset Owen again employs the gypsy leader (Clifford Bruce) to aid him. They set Harry's factory on fire and call him to the scene. He comes, accompanied by Pauline; the fire has gained headway and threatens the whole village, but this matters little to the plans of the plotters. The lovers are thrown into the cellar of an old mill, a bomb is then placed close to the wall, which exploding tears a hole in the wall and the water rushes in.

To make matters worse, a lot of rats are trapped in the cellar also. After the waters have risen considerably Harry and Pauline dive beneath the water and come up in an old chimney. Coming to the roof they start across a cable, hand over hand, which bridges the river.

While they are many feet in the air the cable is cut by the gypsy, and the pair are precipitated into the river many feet below. This ends the hair-raising series of scenes, as the two young people return home, where we leave them for two weeks.

SPOKANE MAYOR BARS WAR FILMS

Special to The Motion Picture News

Spokane, Sept. 21.

MAYOR W. J. HINDLEY, city theatre censor, threw a bomb into the ranks of theatre managers when he issued an order forbidding the exhibition of any motion pictures dealing with the European war.

The action, the mayor explained, was taken as a safeguard against disorder or riots that might be caused through demonstrations of patriotic sentiment aroused by the war scenes. The city council approved the order and copies of it were sent to all vaudeville and picture houses.

The theatre men are undecided whether to resist the order and carry the matter into the courts. The newly-organized Spokane Motion Picture Exhibitors' League has the matter under advisement.

All the managers agree that the regulation is unjust and an unfair discrimination against the theatres as long as stores are permitted to show war photographs and newspapers to print them. The newspapers have taken up the question in defense of the theatre men.

"THE MILLION DOLLAR MYSTERY"

(Thanhouser—Fourteenth Episode)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

AND still the complications grow deeper and the solution is further away from the light than ever. The millionaire's hiding place is so hermetically sealed from our knowledge that we have almost come to forget that he exists; and as for the million dollars, there might as well not be any million dollars if left to us to locate it, except that there must be some valid motive for all of these strange and mysterious doings.

But who knows what will happen next! As for the Russian Countess, heaven only knows what will become of her. The last heard of she was still kicking herself for the mistake that she made with the secret agent from Russia, and had not gotten over the disappointment of that ludicrous incident of counting chicks a little too soon.

But the repose in these eventful lives doesn't last long, and the young people are again hard pressed by the wicked and bold designs of Braine, the leader of the conspirators, and Jackson, his lieutenant. The plan is to get Florence and Jones, the butler, into trouble with Uncle Sam's Secret Service.

The plan is to throw out false evidence that they are counterfeiters. Consequently a bundle of counterfeit bills are hidden in the house in the dead of night, and Jackson writes a letter from a hotel to the secret service exposing the gang that he pretends has its headquarters in the mansion.

But Norton is lucky, almost too lucky, it will appear to many, and gets the plan by reading the blotter in a mirror. He forms a counterplan with the chief. Florence and Jones are arrested; the conspirators are given the chance to search the house, but Norton and the detectives watch in the house to see what they do and install a dictograph.

They are partly successful, but just as they are ready to capture the crooks, one of the number discovers their presence, gives the alarm and they all escape. But reinforcements come up and they seek to break into the den of the conspirators. Just as it seems they are about to succeed, the conspirators make their getaway through a secret door and the officers have to admit that they have been baffled again.

Warner's Celebrates Its Anniversary

Growth of Business During First Year Indicated by Fifty Per Cent Increase in Number of Exchanges and the Doubling of Capitalization—New Exchanges Will Be Added as Demand Increases

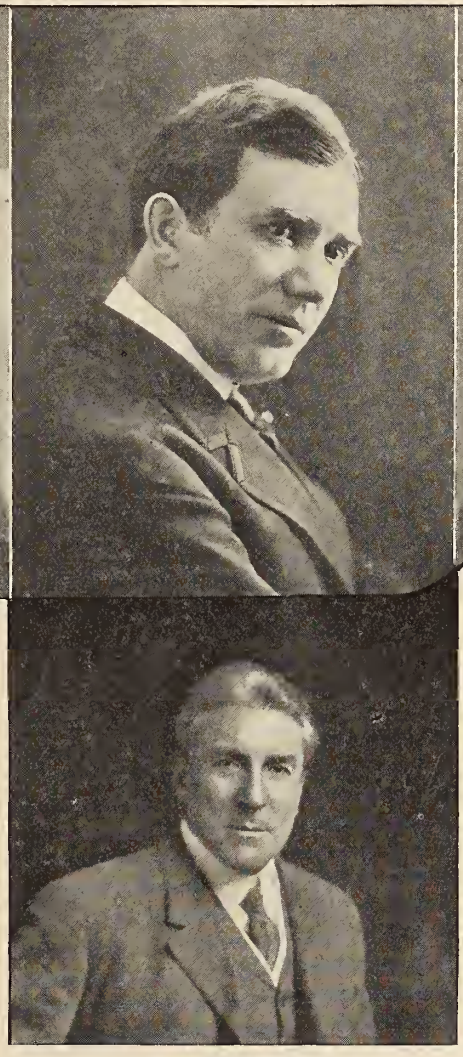
MONDAY night, September 21, the entire staff of Warner's Features, Inc., celebrated the anniversary of the firm's first release on its feature service. The occasion was especially interesting to filmdom, for the reason that the facts adduced by the various officers showed a record of unusual growth.

Furthermore, the demand by exhibitors for "more Warner" has brought about a tremendous increase in the number of releases. Whereas, the original plan was for three features a week, the present requirements have caused the addition of a twenty-one reel weekly program and big specials of four or more reels. In short, Warner's Features, Inc., after one year of active business life, offers to exhibitors as complete a service as it is possible to produce. This service includes single and multiple reel productions selected from the world's producers.

The new weekly program is just now attracting much attention. Plans to make it an unusually well-balanced one have been effectively carried out in the formation of a general producing organization under the title of the United Motion Picture Producers, Inc.

This general company, consisting of experienced and successful film producers, so regulates the production of its individual companies that the diversified character and quality of the Warner's program is always maintained.

THE MEN WHO MADE WARNER'S FEATURES A POWER IN THE FIELD



H. M. WARNER

When P. A. Powers incorporated Warner's Features and accepted the presidency in August, 1913, he did so with the idea of building up an organization for the marketing of feature films on a scale hitherto unattempted. To this end, his first attention was given to distributing facilities. He proceeded at once to establish exchanges, and by the time the first releases were made (on Sept. 22, 1913) twenty offices had been opened in all parts of the country.

Mr. Powers' ideal—that of releasing three big features a week, thus supplying a regular feature service—met with quick response from exhibitors. Warner's Features became popular, and it was soon evident that the right note had been struck.

Then came the rapid developments which have made the company's initial year decidedly a notable one.

FIRST, the constantly increasing business necessitated a corresponding increase in distribution facilities. From time to time new exchanges were opened, until today the number has reached the total of thirty-four, covering the United States, Canada and Europe.

P. A. CHASE

AS to the "Specials" which will be released from time to time, the first of these—now ready—is "The Adventures of Kitty Cobb," adapted from James Montgomery Flagg's famous series of drawings.

Still another development of the company's first year was the action taken at the recent annual meeting of the stockholders. A feature of the meeting was the report of the treasurer, which was received with many expressions of gratification. The report showed the progress made during the year and formed an emphatic record of achieved success.

As a result, it was unanimously decided to double the company's capitalization in order to cover the large increase in its operations.

The stockholders also increased the directorate of the company to seven members instead of four. The directors are: P. A. Powers, J. A. McKinney, W. D. Campbell, of Campbell, Heath & Co., New York; J. E. Baum, of the Supple-Biddle Hardware Company, Philadelphia; H. M. Warner, L. G. Erbe and Leo C. Stern. The officers elected are: P. A. Powers, president; H. M. Warner,

Farnham Heads New Ticket at Screen Club

Advent of Advertising Manager of the All-Star Company Indicates Desire of Many Members to Have Manufacturers Represented

AN eleventh hour ticket has loomed up on the horizon of the Screen Club election to be held on October 3, headed by Joe M. Farnham of the All-Star Company.

JOSEPH M. FARNHAM

The advent of Mr. Farnham in the field marks a desire on the part of many members for a representative of the business end of the film industry in the organization. The new candidate is a charter member of the Screen Club, and has been prominently identified with its affairs since the foundation of the organization.

Mr. Farnham was corresponding secretary in 1913. He was nominated for the vice-presidency in October of the same year, and in all probability would have been elected to the office if at that time there had not been some opposition to a representation from the ranks of the manufacturers.

Now, however, with this prejudice no longer a determining factor in the selection of candidates, there is every reason to suppose that Mr. Farnham will be elevated to a still higher office, that of president.

His many friends are confident in his ability to fulfil the obligations entailed on the encumbent, as Mr. Farnham's constant activities in behalf of the Screen Club eminently qualify him for the position. It was he who, with King Baggot and J. H. Gerhardt now on another ticket for service as a member of the board of governors, was responsible for finding a home for the club in its present rooms at 165 West Forty-seventh street, New York City.

Mr. Farnham whose bonhomie and generally likable qualities has won him a wide circle of friends throughout the film world, has been the prime mover in the Screen Club entertainments.

Other candidates on Mr. Farnham's ticket are as follows:

First vice-president, Bob Daly; second vice-president, "Doc" A. C. Willat; third vice-president, J. C. Graham; treasurer, George Blaisdell; corresponding secretary, Sam Spedon, with George Proctor as an alternate; recording secretary, Fred Beecroft. On the board of directors, to serve two years, are: J. H. Gerhardt, King Baggot, Hopp Hadley, and Jim Kirkwood, with Frank Powell as an alternate.

Another ticket in the field is as follows:

President, King Baggot; first vice-president, James Young; second vice-president, J. Stuart Blackton; third vice-president, Francis X. Bushman; treasurer, George Blaisdell; corresponding secretary, S. M. Spedon; recording secretary, David Wall.

The board of governors are: J. H. Gerhardt, George Lessey, Hopp Hadley and Ashley Miller.

The ticket was nominated by the regular nominating committee, of which Frank Smith is chairman.

ALCO RELEASES FIRST PLAY, "THE NIGHTINGALE"

The accompanying scene from "The Nightingale," released October 5, in which Alco Film Corporation makes its debut, with the prominent dramatic star, Ethel Barrymore, in the title role of Isola, is a silent demonstration of just how far this new motion picture venture will go to make their program attractive.

"The Nightingale" is an original work from the pen of Augustus Thomas and was written by him, throughout ten weeks of work, so that the part therein would admirably suit Miss Barrymore's personality.

Five parts, three hundred scenes and no sparsity of novel features will characterize "The Nightingale."

In addition to Miss Barrymore the cast boasts numerous prominent players, specially selected by Miss Barrymore herself.

"The Nightingale" will be the first Alco release, to be followed by that prince of Irish character portrayers, Andrew Mack, in a Popular Plays and Players production of "The Ragged Earl."

"The Nightingale" is the work of the All Star Feature Corporation.

Exhibitors throughout the country find in the list of plays featuring legitimate stars announced for release by Alco, attractions which will make a strong bid for patronage.

"Marta of the Lowlands," First Kalich Film

Noted Actress Will Be Seen on the Screen in Famous Players Picture, Released October 5

BERTHA KALICH makes her first appearance before the motion picture public in the Famous Players Film Company's five part production of her dramatic success, "Marta of the Lowlands," released on the Paramount Program October 5.

The play was written by the Spanish dramatist, Angel Guimera, and affords her an admirable vehicle for emotional characterization.

After her triumphs in "Monna Vanna" and "The Kreutzer Sonata," much is expected of the actress in the film production of "Marta," and much is forthcoming.

Mme. Kalich makes Marta a patient sufferer, a tragic figure indeed, as she bravely endures all the cruelties and indignities that are thrust upon her by the ruthless "master."

The entire cast of the play were sent to Cuba for the exteriors of this production, where the tropical glades furnished an atmosphere appropriate to the action. The excellent work of the cast must be passed over. Wellington A. Playter suggests with commendable effect the awkwardness and ingenuousness of Manelich, the shepherd; Hal. Clarendon is an ideal Sebastian, cruel, haughty and fiercely passionate, and Lillian Kalich is sweetly pathetic in role of Muri. The Famous Players have made in this a notable production.

"THE SQUARE TRIANGLE"

(Balboa-Box Office—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

A FEW years ago a play of the type of "The Square Triangle" would have had a poor chance for success in motion pictures. It does not depend upon sensational incidents or dare-devil escapades; there is no fighting nor wild dashes on horseback; there are no startling reappearances of lost persons nor chance meetings of old associates.

The motion picture is passing beyond that stage when bald, blood thrilling action was the sole aim of the director, and has now reached a point where the story receives the main emphasis, and human beings may be involved in the most absorbing events without risking their lives.

Of course they will be risking their happiness, but that is another matter. And a public has been found that will take great delight in this kind of story told in motion pictures, a public that is intelligent and discriminating, a public that wishes to be entertained if the entertainment comes up to the level of its taste, and is willing to pay more in order to get what it likes.

Consequently we see signs on all sides of us catering to this taste in photoplays. "The Square Triangle" is a first-class example of what can be done to meet this tendency and to satisfy the new class of audiences. It is a clean, straightforward, interesting story acted with finish and skill and is presented with the idea of proving that kinetograph productions can be made as pleasing and as entertaining and as notable as "legitimate" stage productions, provided an equal or perhaps greater amount of care and thought is given to it.

The story is not new, but it has that better grace of being presented with artistry. Manner is oftentimes more important than matter, and this is one of the times.

Three men are the guardians of Jackie, the daughter of their chum, who won the woman they all loved. Naturally they are vigilant of her welfare and keen-eyed for any dangers that may lurk in her matrimonial alliance.

The young man to whom she engages herself becomes infatuated with a dancer. The guardians for the sake of their ward, try to make a man of him. The girl has found him out by now, and washes her hands of him, because she has found out that she really loves the youngest of her guardians, Edward Treavor.

Joe Singleton, an actor whose experience is limited before the camera, and a newcomer in the field, but long and arduous in that best of all schools for actors, stock, plays Edward Treavor with sincerity and force. He makes a handsome appearance, and without easy bearing and polished manners, he fits into the part perfectly.

Jackie Saunders is just the sweet, winning, innocent creature that might be the ward and the pet of three sharp-sighted bachelors.

"HOW THE KID WENT OVER THE RANGE"

(Reliance—Two Reels)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

WHENEVER a fine-appearing young cowboy and a dimpled-cheeked, flaxen haired girl meet on the broad expansive Western plains, the inevitable happens and after much hard riding and other exciting incidents, the two are reunited in a fond embrace and the film fades from view with a loving kiss. So strong has this convention become in scenarios, that the minute one sees the start of this kind of picture, he resigns himself to his fate, does his best to make himself comfortable, and tries to bear the unescapable with all the patience that he can summon to his aid.

But in the newest Reliance release, "How the Kid Went Over the Range," the producer has hit upon the novel idea of changing the ending somewhat. How he happened to hit upon the idea is a mystery, and yet the thing passes off without the embrace.

What will the audience say, the audience that has been nourished on the conventions so long that they have become dearer than the hard and cruel realities, when the Kid is shot by the sheriff and the girl has to go back home without the consolation of even a dying kiss?

The probabilities are that the audience will sit up and take notice, and remark that here is an extraordinary picture.

The story was written by the celebrated novelist, Cyrus Townsend Brady, and perhaps this is responsible for its breaking away from the iron-clad restrictions of the past. The Kid is made the foreman of a ranch, and on this account his girl, Nell, promises to marry him.

The Kid meets a gambler and yields to his temptation to enter a game. He loses his money and part of the payroll before he catches the gambler cheating; then he shoots him dead and flees.

He is wounded by the sheriff but, continues his flight. Nell has forgiven him now and follows after her beloved. She runs into a hard character, named Bell, from whom she is rescued by the Kid, but just as this moment the sheriff comes up and the Kid is mortally wounded in the battle, and dies out on the plain.

Irene Hunt is fresh and winsome as the girl, Vester Pegg makes the Kid in spite of his weakness a lovable character, and Frank Bennett gives to the outlaw the qualities associated with renegades.

"THE KING OF THE AIR"

(Eclectic—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY CLIFFORD H. PANGBURN

THE startling aeroplane wreck, which is one of the "big scene" in this picture is the real thing with a vengeance. A camera man taking pictures at an aviation field happened to catch a perfect view of a machine which fell as it was about to land.

The machine was completely wrecked and the man in it killed. The incident was used in "The King of the Air" in a most telling manner.

The scenes used are for the most part excellently chosen; the settings show a careful attention to details. The cast is a capable one, the minor roles being well handled, especially that of the doctor.

The story is a French romance, which plays up rather prominently the important part which ready money plays in Continental marriages. Marc Devernis is an amateur aviator, and the son of a wealthy banker. He is in love with a girl whose mother is troubled by that credulity which is all too common among widows with money to invest.

She puts her whole fortune into a rosy scheme of the aviator's father and when the inevitable crash comes she is left nearly penniless. The banker then adds insult to injury by refusing to allow his son to marry the girl because of her lack of a dowry. This leads to a break with his son, who attempts to make him restore the widow's money or at least consent to the marriage.

Marc remains true to the girl and enters a particularly hazardous aviation meet in order to win a prize which will make it possible for him to marry her.

Meantime, she secures a place as a nurse to eke out her slender income. She is assigned to the Red Cross hospital at the meet. Her lover's machine falls, and he barely escapes with his life. His subsequent recovery is largely due to the girl's tender care.

Recognizing his talent the government offers him a large salary as a military aviator. His father, however, realizes that he owes his son's life to his sweetheart and relents. A happy reunion closes the story.

Success With Local Features in Costa Rica

Fixed and washed well, the films dried overnight, and next Tuesday morning, I began to reorder the entire film positive. But the titles.

It was a new one on me. I took some 16 x 20 spoiled sensitive paper and made with a brush titles to correspond with my pictures: 14 different ones I made on a 200-foot roll; but to focus the same I had a little trouble with the first, as my camera has no back focus, and I had to do it direct on the film window.

Easy enough if you had to do it. All titles were developed immediately and by three o'clock I was ready to take my eight hundred feet of film to San José.

When I arrived at the theatre, the ticket man told me that "all seats were sold; only yours remains free." The manager came to meet me and he got excited.

HE took the film to the operator and in a few minutes we were watching with hesitation and admiration, the first film made in Costa Rica in 48 hours, and by a true Costa Rican, with no facilities but with the resolution to do it, fearing that a competitor was going to steal the honor of being the first not only in the country but in Central America.

Two shows were given that night on the fourteenth of October, 1913, with a full house, and after eleven o'clock the manager handed me a check for one thousand colones (almost 450 dollars United States money) to pay me for the rights to exhibit my film and own the same.

That night I slept fine! And the other fellow's film? I cannot say what was the matter, but it was exhibited with failure, forty days after mine. I went to see it myself, and I was disappointed because the film itself was a failure cinematographically, and there were but few people at the other show house.

This story demonstrates that it is not the price of the goods that always counts, for I was working with a 250-dollar outfit against a twenty-five hundred one. With my "poorer" outfit I had the pleasure of doing efficient work.

I will end the first part of my article with a paragraph from the letter dated November 1, 1913, I received from the manager of the firm that sold me the camera.

"LET me congratulate you very sincerely, not only as to the financial success you had by using the motion picture camera I sent you, but also on the complete success which came to you.

"It certainly was some very quick work to take, for the first time, kino pictures on Sunday and present them to the public on Tuesday night. No wonder the people were so enthusiastic, and I likewise am very pleased that you feel so well contented with the machine."

Grau's "Theatre of Science" a Notable Work

Author Has Solved the Problem of Keeping Abreast of the Fast-Moving Film Business—A Work for Every Library, Private or Public

AS a contribution to the history of the motion picture industry, Robert Grau's work, "The Theatre of Science" (Broadway Publishing Company), is as elaborate, informative and entertaining a volume as is likely to issue from any pen for some time to come.

The title fails to indicate accurately the scope of the plan which Mr. Grau carried out in his study. Its three hundred and fifty odd pages, far from being bounded by the confines of the theatre, carry the reader into every nook and corner, every dependency and protectorate of the industry.

The brilliant historical reviews of the small beginnings of things in the motion picture world are followed by chapters that portray, in masterly strokes, the growth and development of every company now in the field. To these are added brief but incisive sketches of every director, actor, manager, scenario editor, publicity man in the field, making the book, in addition to its other qualities, a "Who's Who in Motion Pictures."

For one thing in particular, Mr. Grau is to be especially commended. The motion picture business offers more encouragements and more discouragements to the chronicler of its events than any other existing line of activity.

The phenomenal growth of the industry in an almost incredibly small number of years makes the subject irresistible to the imaginative writer. Yet the difficulty of keeping up to date a book that deals with a field which is so constantly changing its aspects and personnel is great enough to give pause to any but a veteran writer like Mr. Grau.

The adroitness with which he has kept his work, while it was in the making, abreast of every new development in the business, up to the very moment of its issuance from the press, is not the least conspicuous merit of "The Theatre of Science." Yet the two pages of "Last Moment Addenda" prefacing the work proper are a significant proof of the handicaps under which Mr. Grau was forced to labor to make his book something more enduring than words written on the sand of the seashore.

Mr. Grau's work, to sum it up in a phase, is worthy of the industry of which it treats. It belongs in the private library of everyone who professes any degree of interest in motion pictures, amateur or professional, and in every public library in the land.

PREDICTS KIRKWOOD WILL BE NEXT PRESIDENT

The annual election of officers of the Screen Club will be held the first week in October.

Arthur Leslie has this to say regarding the outcome: "I predict the election of James Kirkwood as the next president of the Screen Club. Several months ago I wrote him urging him to run, if King Baggot refused a third nomination.

"I believe King Baggot and Jake Gerhardt will be elected to the board of governors, and George Blaisdell as treasurer. I am working for their election.

"Mr. Leslie holds over for another year on the board of governors. He received at the last election the highest number of votes ever cast in the history of the club.

Live News of the Week

Harry Handworth, president, and William A. Williams, vice-president of the Excelsior Feature Film Company, Inc., are in New York, going over details of their exchange arrangement with the Alco Company. They are also consulting with their architects in reference to the new studio shortly to be erected at Lake Placid.

The board of governors of the New York Screen Club will give a dinner to the retiring and incoming officers of the club, at the Hotel Astor, early in October.

Webster Cullison, director of the Eclair western company has as his character woman his wife, who is known to patrons of the motion picture as Lucie K. Villa. She has had years of theatrical experience and played leads for her husband when he was director in the Lubin Company. Mrs. Cullison is directing a number of young artists who will soon appear in a series of "Kid" pictures.

In "Fantasma," a feature film now being produced by the Edison Company, in which Charles Seay is directing. George Hanlon, Jr., who was so successful with the same piece on the legitimate stage, is appearing as Pico, the clown, and A. B. Carleton, of Carleton Opera fame, impersonates Zamaliel, the devil.

The second release of the Jesse L. Lasky Company through the Paramount Pictures Corporation, and the first of their five reel productions, is "The Making of Bobby Burnit," adapted for the screen by Winchell Smith, from George Randolph Chester's novel.

Edward Abeles is the star, supported by Theodore Roberts and Bessie Barriscale. The picture was released on September 17.

A. J. Allenbaugh, treasurer and general manager of the Famous Players Film Company of Baltimore, has closed a deal with Samuel Goldfish of the Jesse Lasky Company, whereby he has secured the rights for all the Lasky and Paramount releases in Maryland, Delaware, Virginia and the District of Columbia.

Edward Coxen, leading man for the Thomas Rickets American company, when questioned recently about buying an automobile, remarked that one good horse was worth a dozen autos.

Mary Fuller, leading lady of a Victor-Universal company, has just returned to the Imp studio, New York, with Charles Ogle and Walter Edwin, her director. Several features were produced at Shohola, Pa., where the company was stationed several weeks.

King Baggot, star of the Imp-Universal Company, has moved his home to Hotel Shelbourn, Brighton Beach, N. Y., where he is now comfortably situated with his wife and family.

Edgar Lewis suffered a nervous breakdown after the completion of "The Littlest Rebel," "Northern Lights" and "Captain Swift," three features which he directed. He is rapidly recuperating at the Berkeshire Hills.

John Stevens, of Stevens Attractions, Inc., of Buffalo, N. Y., was in New York recently where he closed contracts for several big feature productions which his company will control in that part of the state.

Mr. Stevens is booking features in many of the principal theatres of western New York and local exhibitors report entire satisfaction with his output. This company does business on an exclusive percentage basis.

Margarita Fischer, of the Beauty films, has been very distressed owing to the severe illness of her mother. She says that once or twice lately she has felt like the clown in the children's story who was heartbroken and yet had to run in from the sidewings to face his audiences with a grin on his face. Mrs. Fischer is better, but her family still feel anxious about her.

Fred Thompson has returned to the Vitagraph Company in the capacity of director, a position which he held a few months ago before he left the concern. He returned to the Vitagraph on August 31, and has already started work on some feature productions.

John J. Coleman, formerly director and studio manager of the Gene Gauntier Feature Players, is continually being congratulated on the great success of his daughter, Ann Murdock, who is appearing in the "Beautiful Adventure," a comedy which is now enjoying great success in New York.

The exciting experiences of a young American adventurer in Mexico form a story of great interest as interpreted in a two reel Eclair picture entitled "The Aztec Treasure," released September 23. Featured in the picture are Bob Frazer and Edna Payne.

Arthur Nelson, president and director of the United States Film Corporation, San Diego, California, a factor in the production of the new program of Warner's Features, Inc., came into the field from the "legitimate" when Joe Arens, of the Frontier-Universal, engaged him as director. At that time he had no experience whatever in motion pictures. He originated the character of "Slim," playing the part himself.

For six months Nelson continued to write, produce and act in the "Slim" series of comedies. At the end of this time he formed the United States Film Corporation with A. R. Pelton.

Mr. Nelson was born in Scranton, Pa., July 9, 1876, and has been continuously connected with the dramatic profession for nearly twenty-five years. During the heyday of melodrama he was a Stair and Havlin star, appearing for several years in a number of his own plays.

Among his notable film productions released by Warner's are "Under Fire in Mexico," "The Day of Reckoning," and "The Brand of Bars."

Emerson Dickman has been appointed manager of the Premier Theatre at the corner of Main street and Leroy avenue, Buffalo, N. Y., formerly managed by Claude S. Weill, who will now act as supervising manager.

Mr. Dickman was formerly manager of the Central Park Theatre and returns to the Premier at the request of Mr. Weill, who speaks very highly of Mr. Dickman's qualities as a film man. The Premier orchestra was augmented recently by the addition of a cello. Good business is announced by the management.

The World Film Corporation has opened a branch office in Salt Lake City, Utah, in the G. L. Walker Building. O. F. Woody is in charge and the office will cooperate with others in the West.

The Cleveland branch of the Rudolph Wurlitzer Company has installed motion picture orchestras in the Square theatre, 11920 Madison avenue, Cleveland, and the Miles theatre, 9th street and Huron road in the same city.

Warner's Features has added another exchange to its growing list. J. E. Rickards, for many years a well-known press agent in "legitimate" show circles of the East, who is a sojourner in Arizona for his health, is the local manager at Phoenix.

The Warner programs found instant favor in the Copper State with Western releases. Most of the smaller places have not as yet been subjected to daily changes, and the three releases possible from the Warner office is the opening wedge in the trade.

Edward Hyman, assistant manager of the Strand Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., is looking after the interests of that house during the absence of Harold Edel, who is in Syracuse. Mr. Hyman is "a live wire" young man and is on the job all the time. He was at the Lyric Theatre for some time as assistant manager under Henry W. Marcus.

Four years in pictures and always appearing as the leading woman, is the enviable position held by Ruth Roland, now with the Marshal Neilan Kalem comedy company at Hollywood, Cal. For more than two years she has been known as The Kalem Girl.

In Los Angeles she is known to all the picture fans, and when she drives down street in her big red auto there is a continuous doffing of hats and waving of handkerchiefs. Hundreds of Los Angeles pedestrians now know the Kalem comedienne.

During her four years in films she has become very popular.

HOUSE PETERS AND BEATRIZ MICHELENA IN "SALOMY JANE"
(California M. P. Corporation—Alco Feature)

Sol Lesser, president and general manager of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc., with offices at Portland, Spokane, Seattle, Denver, Salt Lake, San Francisco, and Los Angeles, has returned to the home office at San Francisco, after spending a week with Manager E. H. Emmick, Mike Rosenberg and Ted H. Bergman, of the Los Angeles exchange.

Before leaving Los Angeles Mr. Lesser expressed his hearty approval of the excellent business of that office and stated that he would leave for New York, in company with his attorney, in the next few days, for the purpose of getting in touch with film matters.

It is unofficially reported that the Golden Gate exchanges will begin a complete program service in October.

David Horsley, whose moves are watched with interest by members of the trade, has just joined the ranks of the General Film Company, on whose program he will release comedies under the brand name of Ace.

Full particulars are given elsewhere in this issue.

Oscar Apfel will soon begin work on the Lasky picture, "The Girl of the Golden West," since David Belasco has O. K.'d it. Mr. Apfel will devote all his time to this picture, while Cecil De Mille will direct "The Rose of the Rancho."

Scenario writers are given notice that the Frontier Company are in the market only for one-reel dramas, as they are no longer producing comedies. Address Santa Paula, Cal.

N. G. Spitzer, formerly connected with the Syndicate Film Corporation, has been made manager of the Kansas City office of the World Film Corporation.

Lois Meredith, the star in Sir Gilbert Parker's "Seats of the Mighty," produced on films by the Colonial Motion Picture Company, New York, has won a considerable following among motion picture devotees by her charm and skilful handling of difficult roles.

For the filming of the next George Ade comedy, Francis X. Bushman, E. H. Calvert, Ruth Stonehouse and Wallace Beery, of the Essanay Company, have been obliged to journey to New York, as a number of scenes are to be taken here and in its environs. Mr. Ade will personally supervise the taking of some of the scenes.

Cecil De Mille and eighteen of the Lasky players are in Monterey, Cal., to photograph scenes amid the Missions for "The Rose of the Rancho."

After a vacation of six months, Edythe Sterling has returned to the ranks of the Frontier players.

The Empress theatre at Cherokee, Neb., has been opened by the Bess-Cum Amusement Company and will show the Mutual program.

The Eclectic Film Company has secured some fine film showing scenes in and around Louvain, just before its destruction by the Germans, from Cherry Kearton. It is released under the title of "War Stricken Louvain" and shows battle-scarred Belgian troops, throngs of refugees and other items of interest. Its authenticity is vouched for by both Mr. Kearton and the Eclectic Film Company.

Frank Powell, director of Pathé-Eclectic special features, has had a long experience as director both in the motion picture field and with "legitimate" drama.

He started as stage director for Augustus Thomas and later directed several productions for Ellen Terry in Europe. His debut into the motion picture field was made with the Biograph company, where he directed comedies for two years.

He was then engaged by Pathé Freres in Europe, and after that returned to the "legitimate," from which he came to the Pathé Company on this side of the water, where he has been ever since.

Some of his recent productions are,

FRANK POWELL.

"The Corsair," "Lucille," "The Stain," and "The Ghost." He has just completed "The Taint," a six-reel feature soon to be released.

Jay Morely, recently of the Broncho Company, has joined the Frontier forces at Santa Paula, Cal.

Gerda Holmes, of the Essanay Company, recently demonstrated her domestic ability and proved that she is as good a cook as actress. Miss Holmes has an apartment overlooking Lake Michigan and invited seventeen of her co-workers to a dinner she prepared herself. It was a success from every standpoint.

Hunter Bennett, assistant general manager of the World Film Corporation, has paid a flying visit to the Boston offices of the company, in connection with the Shubert and Brady features.

Lillian Christy, who has played leads with the Vitagraph and Kalem companies, is now a member of the Frontier Company.

GENERAL FILM PROGRAM

"Jim." (Selig. Wed., Sept. 16.)—Charles Wheelock is featured in this play as the lost lover. But his lot is better than that of most luckless lovers, because he brings up the daughter of the woman who eloped with an actor, and this girl grows to love him. The message that he sends to the mother is the same message that she had sent him years before.

"The Ageless Sex." (Vitagraph. Split reel. Wed., Sept. 16.)—A comedy with a moral. It is a warning against the use of artificial means of fighting the ravages of old age; or not so much against using them, as getting caught with them. The husband dreams that his wife is old but keeps young in appearance by this means, and he wakes up to find it all a hideous nightmare. Therefore the women must be wary lest their secrets be revealed in dreams. On the same reel with "Raising a Sunken Yacht."

"Raising a Sunken Yacht." (Vitagraph. Split reel. Wed., Sept. 16.)—Clear pictures of the difficult task of floating again a large yacht that has gone to the bottom. The enormous derricks and cranes and pulleys are capable of performing the job, but a diver is brought into service, too, to fasten the hooks in the ship.

"What the Daisy Said." (Biograph. Wed., Sept. 16.)—Delightfully sweet little play of two country girls whose thoughts have turned to beaux. Mary Pickford with her delightful petulant pout is one of them. The girls consult the daisy, but dissatisfied, turn to a wicked gypsy fortune teller. The romantic Martha is carried away with him, but when his real character becomes plain, she turns to her old steady country lad.

"The Peddler's Bag." (Biograph. Thurs., Sept. 17.)—Played and presented in the best Biograph manner, this drama is distinctly above the average of the one-reeler. A woman, the wife of a gamekeeper, to defend herself from the master's son, shoots him. The husband has to stand trial. The confession of the woman on her sickbed frees him and also justifies the act.

"Sophie's Legacy." (Essanay. Thurs., Sept. 17.)—Sophie becomes the heiress to a vast estate. Then the previous rivalry of Mustang Pete and Slippery Slim for the possession of the lady's fair, plump hand dwindles into insignificance before the new competition. Mustang is making hay when a young lady claims him as her husband, and then Slippery puts in some good licks just to be interrupted by a squaw who claims him as her husband. But this "gag doesn't go with Slim," and he marries Sophie on the spot.

"Politics and the Press." (Vitagraph. Thurs., Sept. 17.)—The hackneyed theme of control of newspapers by unscrupulous politicians done into motion pictures. The young editor is too straightforward and honorable for the boss although he loves his daughter. The outcome is another illustration of the old saying that "honesty is the best policy."

"Sparks of Fate." (Essanay. Two reels. Fri., Sept. 18.)—The latest inventions of science play parts in this gripping story of love and sacrifice in which Francis X. Bushman, Bryant Washburn and Ruth Stonehouse are cast for the leading roles. These names assure one of seeing capital acting. Two wireless operators are rivals for the love of a girl. When the test comes one proves honorable and the other base, and of course the former wins the girl.

"Easy Money." (Kalem. Fri., Sept. 18.)—It all happens through a tramp dressing up in a respectable man's clothing. When a purchaser for the farm comes along, the tramp sells it and pockets the money. Then the real owner raises Cain with the innocent purchaser. The tramp buys an automobile and breaks down in front of the farmhouse. He attempts to get away, but the minions of the law envelop him in their clutches and drag him off to the lockup.

"Father's Timepiece." (Vitagraph. Fri., Sept. 18.)—Billy Quirk, Constance Talmadge and Lee Beggs are the funmakers in this comedy, which is a laugh throughout. Father is robbed of his timepiece and when he finds it in the trousers of his daughter's suitor he is furious, but explanations follow, and matters end happily. The reel is alive with humorous situations and will bring laughs from any house.

"For Repairs." (Lubin. Fri., Sept. 18.)—Played by Dolly Larkin and William E. Parsons. Not much interest is aroused, and the incidents seem too disconnected to make a distinct story. The separation of the husband and wife is abandoned after their child has almost met with death.

"The Lonesome Trail." (Selig. Fri., Sept. 18.)—Quite a good comedy drama featuring Wheeler Oakman and Gertrude Ryan. The action might be faster How an awkward cowboy won the heart of a school teacher is the theme. Several amusing incidents add to its attractiveness.

"Ramona." (Biograph. Reissue. Fri., Sept. 18.)—A pathetic drama with Mary Pickford appearing in the leading part. Excellent photography and scenes. The half-breed girl marries a Mexican against her mother's wishes. Their life is hard as the man is driven from his home by the whites, and later shot by one of them. The girl returns to her people. A strong and appealing story.

"Broncho Billy Butts In." (Essanay. Sat., Sept. 19.)—Brisk and animated comedy with the famous depicter of Western life as the central figure. There is plenty of novelty in the story to interest anyone, and for those who idolize the robust hero of the plains there will be the added pleasure of seeing the versatility of Broncho Billy as an actor, because no matter what kind of story he is called upon to interpret he is always at home.

"The Cub Reporter's Assignment." (Kalem. Sat., Sept. 19.)—Giving a reporter the chance to show that he is the man on the spot at every moment. He visits an inventor to get the facts of his latest invention, He meets his daughter and falls in love with her. The inventor's secretary also loves her and schemes to get the reporter out of the way by stealing the precious plans of the inventor, selling them, and laying the crime on the shoulders of his rival. But the latter is too smart, and shows the villain up in his true colors. The girl is then his. Irene Boyle and Robert Ellis are in the leads.

"Pins Are Lucky." (Lubin. Split reel. Sat., Sept. 19.)—A crank on the luck of finding pins loves the daughter of another crank on the same subject. But the daughter loves another, and in spite of the schemes of the pin cranks, they cannot pin her down to their will. The characters are in the hands of real comedians: Bill Bowers as the crank father, O. N. Hardy as the crank lover, and Raymond McKee as the lover that is loved. It is on the same reel with "The German Band."

"The German Band." (Lubin. Split reel. Sat., Sept. 19.)—Romaine Fielding is not lacking in inventiveness when it comes to putting on comedies. His latest is as jolly a half reel as one would care to see. The professor's daughter elopes with the ineligible young man while the band is giving everybody fits, and is married to the music that her father makes. When he finds it out he tries to tear down the parson's house, but, thankfully, he doesn't. Ed Sedgwick, Eileen Sedgwick, Romaine Fielding, Robin Williamson and Harry Kenneth are the laughable performers in this merry farce. On the same reel with "Pins Are Lucky!"

"At the Risk of His Life." (Selig. Sat., Sept. 19.)—Classified as a melodrama one naturally expects stirring action of the most exciting nature, and he is not disappointed. It is a story of a counterfeiting gang which employed a young engraver who refused to be a criminal and was shut up in a house containing dynamite. When pursuit gets hot they attempt to blow up the house, but get blown up themselves when the explosive is thrown out the window and under the bridge that they are crossing.

"The Reward of Thrift." (Vitagraph. Two reels. Sat., Sept. 19.)—This is a special educational picture that was arranged in cooperation with the Savings Bank Section of the American Bankers' Association to demonstrate the enviable results of thrifty saving, which arouses the envy of the indolent and injudicious and brings its own reward and the respect of the solid portion of our citizenship. Ned Finley and Tefft Johnson were the producers and take parts along with Rose Tapley, Lucille Hammil and Jack Harvey.

"Just a Bit of Life." (Biograph. Mon., Sept. 21.)—A story concerning a college professor and his matrimonial troubles. The acting is good, but there is a complete failure to give any real notion of college life or customs. The elopement of the professor's wife is little short of ridiculous.

"Sweedie's Skate." (Essanay. Mon., Sept. 21.)—An entertaining bit of comedy with a good proportion of "rough house." Wallace Beery, Ben Turpin, Leo White and Charles Wright compose the cast. A cook goes to a skating rink adorned in her mistress' fine raiment and jewels. Complications follow.

"Fine Feathers Make Fine Birds." (Vitagraph. Mon., Sept. 21.)—A rather well acted story which deals with a trite subject in a way which is not startlingly original. Leah Baird and William Humphrey are featured.

"The Livid Flame." (Selig. Two reels. Mon., Sept. 21.)—This is a rather impressive drama marked by considerable originality, both as to plot and the way in which it is presented. It is a temperance drama.

"Love's Magnet." (Essanay. Tues., Sept. 22.)—Adapted from a magazine story. A girl is hypnotized and held captive by a man for ten years. Her rescue by the fiance seems a trifle belated. In the cast are Beverly Bayne, Bryant Washburn, Helen Dunbar and Frank Dayton.

"The Blood Ruby." (Vitagraph. Two reels. Tues., Sept. 22.)—An addition to a vast galaxy of films having to do with rubies of great price. There are a number of dramatic situations, but no great amount of originality is exhibited in the plot. The ruby is stolen by use of an imitation stone, and an innocent man is convicted of the theft. Maurice Costello is featured.

"The Wise Detective." (Lubin. Tues., Sept. 22.)—The short end of a split reel. A clever crook nearly gets away with a big haul, but a woman discovers his identity. Mae Hotely and C. W. Ritchie are featured.

"A Six Foot Romance." (Lubin. Tues., Sept. 22.)—On the same reel with "The Wise Detective." A comedy in which tight slippers figure. Nell has ambitions to marry a count, although she loves Jack. The American wins out by a little trick at dinner. In the cast are Jerold T. Hevener, Don Farrandou and Mabel Paige.

"A Poisoned Bit." (Edison. Two reels. Fri., Oct. 2.)—An engrossing story of the scion of an English family who was stolen from his home by gypsies and grows up to become a jockey. He rides a horse in the all-important race that lays down and suspicion points to him. He is dismissed, and even the girl that he loves looks upon him as guilty. He drifts to his own father's house as stableboy, and his identity and his innocence are both established in the presence of the girl who had discarded him.

"A Transplanted Prairie Flower." (Edison. Sat., Oct. 3.)—The call of the West is strong in the breasts of that section's sons and daughters. Beatrice Morgan, who wrote this scenario, has made it the central idea of her picture. An heiress comes East to learn society manners; she captures the social lion attempting to break into her aunt's jewelry safe, and then she goes back to her beloved plains and the man that she has left behind.

"The Legend of the Amulet." (Kalem. Sat., Oct. 3.)—Unusual Indian picture based upon an old legend. A plague is raging and an Indian maiden is stricken. Her sweetheart hears of an amulet that has the power of restoring health. He is led by a phantom chief to the hiding place. The amulet is stolen by a rival, but it is regained after a desperate struggle. The parts are played by real Indians, Princess Mona Darkfeather, Chief Phillippi and Big Moon.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

"Matty, the Universal Boy, No. 6." (Imp. Thurs., Sept. 24.)—The introduction of Nathan Strauss, Hy Mayer and De Wolf Hopper, whom Matty visits to obtain subscriptions for the newsboys' outing causes it to be one of the most entertaining of the series. Scenes in Steeplechase, Coney Island, New York City follow, with the boys enjoying themselves in sundry manners. A fine entertainer.

"A Shooting Match." (Sterling. Two reels. Thurs., Sept. 24.)—Ford Sterling in a laughable comedy which could be condensed. He enters a shooting match to win a girl and when he sees his rival winning bribes the scorer to give him blank cartridges. He wins, but at the end of the match the scorer relents and tells the other. A chase results, and Ford is finally treed. The tree is cut down and then as our hero or villain breathes his last he joins the hands of his rival and the girl.

"The Man in the Attic." (Frontier. Sun., Sept. 27.)—This is a meaningless drama and contains no ostensible plot. Joe is a counterfeiter and because of his bad money another man is accused of the theft but at length is exonerated. "The Man in the Attic" seems to be a side issue.

"The Battle." (Sterling. Two reels. Mon., Sept. 28.)—A juvenile comedy-drama in which the leads are the Sterling Kids. Billy goes to sleep in the arms of the old major, and dreams that he was the messenger sent from the frontier fort, which was being attacked by Indians, for aid. Some good battle scenes are introduced. Quite an enjoyable picture.

"Our Land of Gold." (Powers. Split reel. Fri., Sept. 25.)—This is shown on the same reel with "Be Neutral," and portrays the various methods of mining gold in Alaska. Interesting and very instructive.

"Charlie's Smoker." (Crystal. Split reel. Tues., Sept. 29.)—On the same reel with "Belmont Butts In." Charlie seizes the chance and gives a smoker while his wife Vivian is away. Vivian is much adverse to the use of the weed and returns home, thinking there is a fire in the house, with the result that the firemen break the party up. Rather old comedy, but laughable.

"Belmont Butts In." (Crystal. Split reel. Tues., Sept. 29.)—On the same reel with "Charlie's Smoker." The mischievous orphan girl causes a lot of trouble for her adopters by her many tricks. Not so funny and rather vague.

"'Till the Sands of the Desert Grow Cold." (Eclair. Two reels. Wed., Sept. 30.)—Eclair can do better than this. The film falls way below the company's high standard. A woman marries a man who turns out to be an inebriate, discarding a worthy lover. Later when her husband attempts to kill the other man he runs away with the child, whom he brings up. Many years after he meets the woman, but she is then happily married to another man.

"Fate's Finger." (Eclair. Sun., Sept. 27.)—A strong human interest drama with Mildred Bright, Bob Frazer and Will Shearer in the leading roles. The doctor's wife intends to desert him and leaves a note on the table informing him of her desertion. She learns the bad character of the man she intended to elope with and returns to find that her child has destroyed the note, to her great relief.

"In the Clutches of the Villain." (Joker. Sat., Oct. 3.)—Another side-splitting picture with Max Asher, Louise Fazenda, William Franey, Gale Henry and Sam Kaufman in the leading parts. The cruel debtor demands the hand of his creditor's daughter, but the hero arrives in time to kick the villain off a bridge after hearty laughs have been created.

"White Wolf." (Nestor. Wed., Sept. 30.)—The story is based on an Indian legend and is quite pretty. A tribe of redskins supposes that the spirit of its cruel Medicine Man was at times embodied in a wolf. The Indians at last find out this secret and kill him while he is in the shape of the animal.

("Man Who Was Misunderstood"—Imp—2 Reels —Sept. 17)

"The New Butler." (Joker. Wed., Sept 30.)—The consequences that follow when two old people get married without the knowledge of their children and when the children, too, join the benedicts, are naturally funny, and are uproariously so when Ernest Shields plays the leading role.

"The Proof of a Man." (Victor. Mon., Sept. 28.)—The girl in this story, played by Vera Sisson, despises a cripple, enacted by J. W. Kerrigan, but he proves himself a man by rescuing her from an opium den where she has been carried by another. A fine drama.

"Love Disguised." (Joker. Sat., Oct. 3.)—A clever comedy in which a motion picture actor poses as a duke and thus wins the hand of the girl whose mother dislikes him because of his profession. Max Asher and Louise Fazenda create the laughs.

MUTUAL PROGRAM

"The Right to Die." (Broncho. Two reels. Wed., Sept. 30.)—A drama built around the responsibility of a man to his family. A broker has lost all of his fortune, and determines in despair to end his life. The poison is not violent enough and he has a dream in which he sees what will happen to his wife and daughter when he has gone. He wakes up when his wife and daughter rush in, and of course he thinks no more of suicide because it was a mistake that he had lost his fortune.

"The Gamekeeper's Daughter." (Domino. Two reels. Thurs., Oct. 1.)—A stirring drama because laid in a more stirring time than ours when personal prowess counted far more than now, when court favorites intrigued for the downfall of rivals and the life of a subject was at the mercy of a monarch. The settings and the costumes are in splendid keeping with the demands of the piece, and the acting is all that could be asked for.

"Our Mutual Girl, No. 36." (Reliance. Mon., Sept. 21.)—Margaret pays a visit to Newport, and disports herself in fine clothes along the avenues of wealth. She gets acquainted with Captain Welles of the navy, who insists upon her viewing the dress parade of the sailors of the naval training division. After this, Margaret's longing to see Baby Lily becomes overmastering and she motors to New York to see the cunning little thing. Then the most unexpected happens. The baby is found by its father, Mrs. Rogers' chauffeur.

"Down the Hill to Creditville." (Majestic. Fri., Sept. 18.)—Most amusing and original comedy of the man who gets married by the installment plan and furnishes his home by the same easy method. It is not meant that he gets partly married but simply that he makes a part payment on the minister's fee. But the creditors get on his trail, and even the minister doubts him, and while the others take away their belongings, he carries off the bride. The best things in the picture are the clever rhymed subtitles. Dorothy Gish takes a part in the fun-making.

"The High-Grader." (Reliance. Wed., Sept. 16.)—Virile exposition of mining life. The high-grader outwits the sheriff and his enemies, and through the aid of his girl gets away with the gold that he carries off in his mouth each day from the mine. The officers came, searched the trunk and found it empty, nailed down to the floor to make it seem laden with the precious metal. It was then too late to catch the gold-bearer.

"Every Man Has His Price." (Majestic. Tues., Sept. 15.)—With an ending that is at any rate surprising if not logical, this picture will hold the spectator's keen interest until it fades away into darkness. It seems that the sheriff is corrupt to the core when he accepts a bribe from the mine owner, but when he turns all this money over to the people whom the owner has ousted of their property, our opinion changes.

"Redemption of a Pal." (American. Two reels. Mon., Sept. 21.)—Described as a sociological drama, this play more than lives up to its label. A rich banker becomes interested in a girl of the slums and helps her in neighborhood work. She, aided by her beau, rescues his sister from an opium den that has caught fire. The banker realizes that he loves her as she goes off with her "steady."

"Meg of the Mines." (Majestic. Tues., Sept. 22.)—The story of how a brave girl saved her father's claim from two blackguards. The girl is portrayed capably by Mae Marsh. She hides in the back of the rivals' wagon when they rush off to the land office, but is discovered and left on the plain. An old Indian finds her and aids her to get in her father's claim before the wicked miners, and thus all ends as it should.

"Fatty Again." (Keystone. Sat., Oct. 3.)—Uproarious farce featuring that ever popular and funny comedian, Roscoe Arbuckle, as Fatty. The scenes of Fatty's troubles and mishaps and ultimate successful handling of a difficult situation will keep the audience in a continual peal of side-splitting merriment.

"Hard Cider." (Keystone. Mon., Sept. 28.)—A girl and a boy plan to elope. The father spies on them from the interior of a cider barrel. The boys in the neighborhood steal the cider barrel for cider and roll it down hill and up dale. The father has an awful time, because he is still in the barrel. When he gets his release therefrom the young people have concluded their clandestine design.

"The Varsity Race." (Thanhouser. Two reels. Tues., Sept. 22.)—The director and the scenario writer have hit upon a felicitous idea in giving in picture form the story of a boat race. About this all-important spring event they have woven an entertaining story of student life and the fidelity of a girl to the bow oar, who has been unjustly forced to resign from college. But he is taken back just in time to row, and of course his crew wins the race. The scenes were taken of a real race between eight-oared shells.

THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

"The Taming of Sunnybrook Nell." (American. Fri., Sept. 25.)—A city man attempts to take advantage of an unsophisticated country girl whom he meets on his vacation and falls in love with, but the mountaineer lover steps between the girl and the man's evil designs. The coolness and faithfulness of her woodman lover stirs the latent sparks in her. Vivian Rich plays the mountain girl.

"Caught In a Tight Pinch." (Beauty. Tues., Sept. 22.)—His shoes are too small and he has no others to wear to the dance that his best girl is giving. So the poor fellow is up against it. But he goes, anyway, and while he doesn't dance like Vernon Castle he hides his suffering with Stoic resignation. And his rival steps on his girl's toe, and thereafter the sailing is smooth.

"Foiled Again." (Komic. Sun., Sept. 20.)—A comedy that has many of the qualities that always please. It is brisk and lively, and well calculated to keep spectators from dozing off through ennui. No matter how blasé the patron of the theatre, he will find plenty to laugh at in this newest Komic release. A stage villain is sent by the Villains' Union to make way with a girl. He picks the wrong girl but discovers in time that she has no money.

"His Faith in Humanity." (American. Wed., Sept. 23.)—Tense and gripping drama thta aims to be an exposition of a present-day sociological problem. A rich man has unshaken faith that human nature is essentially good. He takes an ex-convict in his home and makes him the butler. His safe is robbed and suspicion falls upon the man. But it is revealed in time that the wife is the guilty party.

"The Prodigal Husband." (Royal. Sat., Sept. 12.)—Rural life comes in for a lot of ridicule in motion pictures, some of which is just, but the greater part is exaggerated beyond measure. This picture comes under the latter head, and while it pretends to no truthful picture of country life, it does not justify itself by the other reason for existence, giving a due amount of entertainment.

"The Test of Flame." (Domino. Two reels. Thurs., Sept. 24.)—When it comes to the crucial test the old fisherman discovers that he loves his grandson better than his violin. A house is completely destroyed by fire in the last reel. Beautiful photography and scenes.

NEWS WEEKLIES

"Animated Weekly, No. 132."—Canadian regiments are shown receiving war colors from the hands of the Princess Patricia. There is a spectacular diving contest at Salem, N. H.; the national G. A. R. encampment at the reunion at Detroit; the lowering of the automobile record by De Palma at Brighton Beach, N. Y.; boys acting as municipal officers at Portland, Ore.; a review of the Albanian troops by Prince William of Wied, and numerous other interesting topical events.

"Mutual Weekly, No. 90."—Views from six countries are shown in this issue. Among them are: the Queen Mary entering Queenstown Harbor; motorcyclists enlisting as dispatch carriers. There is a meeting of the Chamber of Deputies; the commandeering of automobiles for war purposes; a glimpse of the famous German regiment, the Death's Head Hussars. Numerous other topical pictures of absorbing interest are included in the bill.

"Hearst-Selig News Pictorial, No. 58." (Selig. Thurs., Sept. 17.)—War still holds a prominent place in this weekly. The first pictures that have come from Berlin since the war started are shown, photographs of the German troops drawn up in the squares of the Prussian capital. War pictures do not monopolize the space, and attention is given to events of interest in different sections of this country and of the world.

Hobart Bosworth Writes and Produces Own Play

"Pursuit of the Phantom" Is a Dramatic Picture, with an Allegorical Tinge That Enhances Its Appeal—Released Through Paramount

"WHAT I had, I lost; what I lost, I kept; what I spent, I have."

From this singular theme Hobart Bosworth, who wrote the play as well as produced it and played the lead, evolves a story of unusual interest and strength and with a strong emotional appeal.

The settings for the first part of the story are among the great cliffs and caves of Laguna Beach, California. Later the main theme of the story shifts to the city where the settings show the house of the wealthy man.

A series of strongly contrasted scenes shows the paths followed by two young men in their pursuit of happiness, one an artist, played by Hobart Bosworth himself, and one a man of wealth, interpreted by Courtenay Foote. The conflict which their opposite ideals engenders continues to their children. but finally brings to the rich man the realization that his greed for wealth and power is the pursuit of a false ideal and to the artist the proof that his choice of love and simple naturalness is the only one which will bring happiness.

The three love stories which bring these groups together are exquisitely portrayed and full of charm and novelty. Rhea Haines plays the society girl, who sacrifices love to wealth. Helen Wolcott is the elfin child of nature with whom the artist finds true happiness. Myrtle Stedman and E. J. Flynn are happily cast as the daughter of the artist and son of the financier, respectively. A fascinating vein of fantasy runs through the play and a feature is the allegory with which the play closes, in which triple exposure is used. This final scene symbolizes the meaning of the paradox in a bit of fine camera work, for which credit must be given to George W. Hill.

This Bosworth film will be released through the Paramount Program, September 24.

TO ACT AS REPRESENTATIVES

The Spero-Kent Film Corporation, World's Tower building, New York City, has informed the trade of its desire to act as representatives in connection with importations, exports, buying, renting or any phase of the industry.

The company guarantees minimum prices, lower perhaps than the average firm can obtain because, as the Spero concern claims, of its large clientele. The compensation is a standard legitimate commission.

The company declares that no matter how big or little a client may be or where he is situated, either a buyer or seller, the entire organization of the Spero company is at the disposal of its customers.

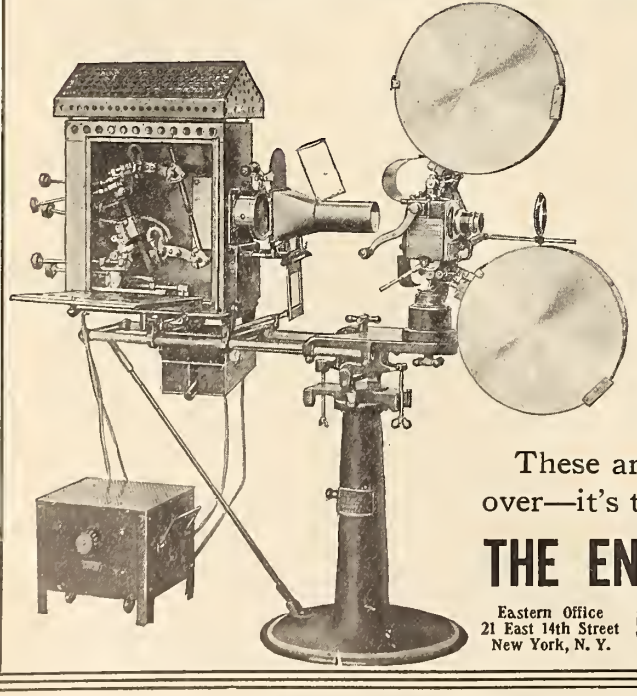
vice-president; O. S. Goan, treasurer; J. A. McKinney, secretary; P. A. Chase, assistant secretary and treasurer.

During the anniversary celebration President Powers struck the keynote of the company's policy in a few words.

"I want especially to impress upon you," said Mr. Powers, "that our growth is due to one prime cause—we give the exhibitor what he needs. We have been giving him great features. We are now giving him a complete service of the best single and multiple reels that can be produced. It is the exhibitor's part to please his public. It is our part to enable him to do so. So long as we bear in mind this truth, we will go forward with still greater strides."



Included in the plans for the coming year are further additions to the number of Warner exchanges. The idea is to make it as convenient as possible for exhibitors of Warner's program and features to transact business with the company.

UNITED PROFIT-SHARING COUPON SERVICE

Now Co-operating With First Class Theatres

We are now ready to contract with high class houses for the right to issue United Profit-Sharing Coupons with admissions.

These coupons are exchangeable for the same premiums and on the same basis as United Cigar coupons, and are also packed with a long list of household products.

They are already the most widely known coupons in use, but their popularity will be increased by the great amount of new publicity they will receive.

United coupons will make it possible for you to run full capacity houses all the time. You get full advertising equipment, and the right to display the United Profit-Sharing Shield.

Write us to-day if interested, giving location of your theatre, average number of admissions per day, how much competition you have, and when you would want to begin.

Organization Is Trade's Great Need

each individual member will appoint himself a committee of one to explain these things to his fellow exhibitors.

"Publicity such as has been offered by THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS, will prove invaluable in gaining this end.

"The chief value of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America to the exhibitor is the protection which it affords to the exhibitors' interests as against adverse legislation, unfair competition on the part of 'fly-by-night' concerns and the guarding against any conditions that might serve to permanently injure the business.

"The advancement of conditions which tend to the uplifting of the industry should be also one of the most important aims of the organization.

"UNITED effort on the part of local state and national organizations for the betterment of conditions should be made in a progressive, general way. Local conditions must be handled by each local. Many exhibitors, not members of the league, have in the past derived benefits from the fights made by the organization and will realize that it is to their advantage to be enrolled as members if these things are pointed out to them."

No Results Unless Members Pull Together

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Dallas, Sept., 22.

WHILE L. G. Bissinger, manager of the Queen Theatre, is not a member of the Exhibitors' League, either State or national, he believes that they are good things if more enthusiasm was injected into them by the members.

"Yes, I am in favor of the exhibitors organizing," said Mr. Bissinger when seen by a representative of THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

"The only thing that I can see against them is that those who are members don't pull together. By co-operating they could do a vast amount of good and in a few years an organization of great strength could be built up among the exhibitors.

"There are five hundred film houses in Texas. I don't know what percentage of those who operate them are members of the League, but it is easy to see what influence an organization with all working together could exercise.

"ONE of the main reasons in holding an exposition of moving picture machines at the coming fair here in Dallas, and the effort that is being made to bring some of the leading screen actors to Dallas at that time, is to try and arouse their interest and strengthen the State organization of exhibitors.

"What I would like to see is more co-operation of the various State and national organization with the officers in regard to censorship. The quicker the film men realize that officers must do what they think is right in regard to censorship and not try to oppose them the better it will be for the business.

"Outside of stronger co-operation along all lines by the exhibitors and a disposition to work more in hand with the officers I could not suggest anything special. All other lines of business are organized, and there is no reason why the film men should not do the same."

$207,000 DALLAS HOUSE OPENS

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Dallas, Sept. 22.

WHAT is declared to be the most costly film house south of Chicago is the Queen, recently opened in Houston. This house was erected and is being operated by the Queen Theatres Incorporation.

This same company operates the Queen theatres at Dallas and Galveston. The new Houston house cost the sum of $207,000 and is undoubtedly one of the most handsome theatre buildings in this section of the country. Houston people are very proud of their new amusement house and crowded houses are the rule.

Crowds Throng Broadway Rose Gardens

New York's Latest Place of Amusement Shows Motion Pictures in Connection with a Restaurant and Cabaret Show

WITH the opening of the Broadway Rose Gardens, New York's latest place of entertainment, the motion picture invades a field which was heretofore reserved only for the popular cabaret entertainers, and from the great success which "Thirty Leagues Under the Sea" attained the first night that the place was opened to the public, their future success in places of like sort seems to be assured.

The Broadway Rose Gardens are situated at Fifty-third street and Broadway, New York, and are under the management of George F. Kerr, and the place is supervised by Mrs. A. McIver Kerr. Their aim is to make the place one of refinement, and from all appearances their aims will be attained successfully. The house was opened to the public Monday, September 14.

Besides rivaling all other restaurants which boast of the best cabaret dancers and singers, the Broadway Rose Gardens will offer motion pictures to its patrons. Following the example of the first one, the submarine picture, the others to follow will be the best that the industry offers.

In a preliminary opening given to the members of the press and officers of the concern, a lunch was served, the cabaret performers went through their part of the program with great success, and then the picture was shown, accompanied by a lecture by Carl M. Gregory, the head photographer of the expedition which made the pictures, and which are elsewhere reviewed in this issue.

The main hall of the place is beautifully decorated with artificial roses and has a balcony extending round it. Novel lighting effects are introduced. At one end of the hall a door leads to the theatre or access may be gained from the street, thus turning it into a separate theatre.

Two orchestras furnish the music for the restaurant and an organ and orchestra play in the theatre.

Quite a sensation was created in the afternoon when everybody rushed to a fountain at the end of the dance floor, on the supposition that champagne was flowing freely.

BOWMAN ISSUES DENIAL

The Charles O. Bowman Popular Photo Plays Corporation denies the statement published in last week's issue of THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS that the Thistle Photo Play Company of Los Angeles, is making three reels of negatives weekly for its use.

UNION HILL, N. J., HOUSE OPENS

The Temple theatre, Union Hill, N. J., opened its doors on Saturday evening, September 10, to a large crowd of patrons. "The Wrath of the Gods" was the picture chosen for the opening.

It is one of the finest picture houses in northern New Jersey, and has a seating capacity of twelve hundred and is fireproof. Since opening, "My Official Wife," "Home Sweet Home" and "Love, Luck and Gasoline" have been shown.

Besides the Temple, Union Hill has six other picture houses, all doing good business, the Auditorium, Mutual; Palace, Licensed; Fulton, Universal; Bijou, Licensed; Red Star, Mutual, and the Pastime, running Famous Players and other attractions.

Union Hill has only a population of about 15,000, still business is very good, the managers state.

UNIVERSAL FILMS "THE AWAITED HOUR"

"The Awaited Hour" is the title of a short story which appeared some time back in the "Century Magazine."

The story was from the pen of Eugene Manlove Rhodes, one of America's virile authors, and has been secured by the Universal and adapted to a two reel drama. Mr. Brennon has been chosen to produce the same. Important in the cast are William Welsh, William Shay and Violet Mercereau.

Teaching the Exhibitor Co-operation

whole play was about, nor even mentioning the title of the film, merely stating that it would be shown during such a week.

In the review Jensen would purposely make an error, not in spelling or grammar, but in describing the actions of the characters.

The mistake would be a minor one, and the utmost concentration on the part of the contestants would be necessary to discover it.

Suitable prizes were awarded to the sucessful participants, which Jensen furnished the exhibitors at cost. Buying them in bulk, as it were, the average price was small.

The competition enhanced the value of the magazine, and took away the onus that clings to everything free. The issues were retained and carefully perused. The subtly written advertising matter was assimilated at the same time.

Jensen arranged the contests so cleverely that the patrons of the theatres which distributed the syndicate sheet gradually looked forward to its advent. The patronage was soon on the increase, due mainly to the enthusiasm of those who attended the performances.

And as the exchange had an indirect hold on each competition, it was impossible for an over-ambitious exhibitor to ignore the work of the pioneer. Jensen profited with the others.

THE fraternal spirit further manifested itself in the co-operative selection of an expert.

Jensen's preliminary visit to the various theatres had shown him many defects which the managers, spurred on by his kindly, though anonymous, suggestions, had remedied.

Such an examination as he was able to give with the little time at his disposal was too cursory to do anything more than smooth off the rough edges. The managers realized the need of an unprejudiced critic with sufficient creative ability and analytic insight to probe into things and discover the flaws.

The second important step, taken by the combined exhibitors at Jensen's instigation, was the selection of just such a man.

His duty was to visit each theatre in the combination and spend whatever time was necessary to promote its patronage-pulling power. His expenses were defrayed from the common fund.

All findings that might be general in their effect were forwarded to Jensen, who, in turn, printed them in the weekly bulletin—the official organ of the exhibitors. Thus all were benefited at a minimum expense, and no exhibitor was obliged to await his turn but could remedy his defects at the outset. This movement, backed by the hearty co-operation of the managers, had wonderful results.

The third problem which Jensen and his cohorts tackled was the music that accompanied the films—especialy the features. Ordinarily each house decided upon that, with the result that few pianists or orchestras played appropriate music. The quick change of program robbed many of the musicians of the incentive of keeping up the standard. Popular waltzes, marches and songs of the day were generally played.

Jensen sought to remedy that.

At the united expense of the exchange and the exhibitors, aided at times by the manufacturers themselves, a man was permanently hired to review the films and select such music as he deemed most appropriate.

Arrangements were made with a music house to furnish the printed copies at a reduced rate—one set of which accompanied each film. Jensen even went so far as to have special music written for certain scenes in important features, broadly advertising the fact.

There were certain films, of course, which he did not bother with, such as split-reel farces—where a lively tune sufficed—scenic and educationals. Jensen had an eye on the profits, and so refused to be prodigal in his expense any more than he was niggardly.

BY this time all the exhibitors outside of the pale realized the significance of the new association. They awoke to the fact that it paid to deal with Jensen. In the first place solicitors from his exchange did not attempt to gain clients by knocking the programs of rivals. They came to the managers with tangible arguments of what Jensen was doing for others and would do for them if they gave him the opportunity.

They recognized that the efforts of the other exchanges were mere imitations of what Jensen had conceived. And to imitate, they knew, was to acknowledge oneself inferior to another. So when an exhibitor received a courteously worded invitation to join the association, the chances were that he accepted.

"THE PLUM TREE"

(Essanay)

REVIEWED BY C. J. VERHALEN

THE first of the mystery stories which are being run by the Ladies' World was released by the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company on Sept. 18. The Ladies' World offers a prize for the best concluding chapter of the story. This chapter is not printed in the magazine, but is shown in the film interpretation.

Francis X. Bushman plays the leads in the photoplays. In "The Plum Tree" he assumes the role of Craig Ewell, a character which gives him opportunity to play a role that brings out his acting splendidly.

Beverly Bayne acts the part of Alice Graham as it should be. Her unaffected and unconscious manner of portraying a character is clearly demonstrated in this picture. Lester Cuneo, Harry Dunkinson, Helen Dunbar and Frank Dayton lend them splendid assistance.

One really does not have to read the story to become interested in the picture, although the omission of the concluding chapter lends an added excitement to the picture to those who have read the novel version.

The scenes of the picture are all well laid out.

They are typical of the views they are supposed to represent. Producer Calvert has built a fine picture around this story that has the proper amount of interest in it and the exact portion of romance to make it stand out as a photoplay of merit.

His selection and staging of exterior scenes are fine pieces of work. Especially his battle scenes savor of the real thing. Each player fits into a niche that develops good acting and a good story.

Craig Ewell and Norris Griggs are in love with Alice Graham. One night the limited is held up and Craig is accused of the crime. Griggs had lured him into it to get him out of the way. Craig is tried and found guilty

Alice is forced into a loveless marriage with Griggs. Ten years later Craig is freed and wanders to the Pacific Coast. Griggs has become the financial leader in a Mexican revolution plot. Craig is discovered watching the rebel ships being loaded and is put to work on the vessel. He overhears the revolutionists' plot, and in a terrific hand to hand fight, swims to shore and gives the alarm.

The Federal troops guided by Craig rush to the scene and a brisk skirmish takes place. Griggs and Craig, not recognizing each other, engage in an encounter in which Griggs is mortally wounded. Craig carries him to a nearby hut where he confesses to a padre of having planned the train robbery.

Craig overhearing this, rushes to the bedside and there is a mutual recognition. He returns to Alice where a reunion is effected under the "old plum tree."

"MARKIA"

(Ambrosio-Torino—Five Parts)

REVIEWED BY J. BURROUGHS NOELL

THE Third Punic War which culminated in the destruction of Carthage offers a rare opportunity to the producer of motion pictures to present spectacular and stirring scenes. And the producer has not been slow to see his chance. In "Markia" we have the elements that go to make a beautiful picture elaborate, even to the point of tropical richness in the settings of the gardens and the villas about Carthage. The stark realism in the battles on land and see which show no glaring anachronisms in the methods of fighting, and intelligent acting by the principals, indicate at times the sparks of real genius.

Each one of the leading players has been chosen for the respective parts not alone on the score of histrionic ability, but on account of the physical fitness of the player to the part. Consequently, we see no puny anaemic persons wearing cuirass and helmet and wielding a sword that might weigh more than the wielder.

Each one is stalwart, robust, fine in appearance, the very type of ancient Roman and Carthaginian that fought hand to hand for the supremacy of the world. The women are the kind that could be expected to bear such sons and to do their part nobly in the annihilating struggle.

But after the most interesting point in this magnificent photoplay is the accuracy with which a great historical event has been vivified on the screen.

The details of armaments, swords and spears and daggers and shields, the great catapults that battered down walls with huge stones, the graceful triremes, the earliest forerunners of the dreadnoughts of today—all of these are reproduced with telling correctness. The pictures were made in Italy and add another laurel to the achievements of that land in making superb feature plays.

In the prologue, Cato is shown in the Roman Senate uttering his famous words, "Carthago delenda est," and then the Roman troops are seen setting out for Africa.

In the final scenes Carthage is seen in flames from the torches of the Roman soldiers, the Governor is pursued by the Roman galleys and killed in battle, and the faithful lovers, Markia, daughter of the Governor of the city, and Sirabas, a young lieutenant, are reunited after many trying hardships and intense suffering.

WAR TAX A HARDSHIP TO SMALL THEATRES

Special to THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS

Rochester, N. Y., Sept. 23.

THE news that the final draft of the war tax law contained a provision for taxing all theatres in cities of 15,000 inhabitants or over, $100 apiece, came as a shock to local picture men, who immediately began figuring whether the picture theatres would be included in the list.

At present, it appears as though the motion picture houses will be taxed with the others. The big houses will be able to stand it, but for the smaller ones, the tax will be a burden.

IN AND OUT OF LOS ANGELES STUDIOS

members of the company fear their end is near.

A bona fide autopsy, with a deputy coroner, policemen and coroner's jury were used in this picture relating how the life of a young physician was all but wrecked, when he thought he gave an overdose of strychnine. Irene Hunt, Mary Alden, Ralph Lewis and Jack Conway play prominent parts.

Tam Young's latest as "Bill the Office Boy" is to break in and prevent the stenographer (Fay Tincher) from marrying a millionaire, in order to save the boss (Tod Browning) from the trouble of securing new help. This constitutes the eighth of the "Bill" series made by Eddie Dillon.

In the past few days the Komic company produced "Dizzy Joe's Career," in which Director Dillon played the name part. The series of cartoons by A. B. Frost in the "Century Magazine" furnished the basis for the plot and Dillon more than made good as a snake charmer in a circus. The scenario was written by C. Allen Gilbert.

Forest Fire Subject

Charles Giblyn is directing a forest fire picture, to be released on the U program as "The Wall of Flame." For this some excellent pictures were made at Griffith Park, in the foot hills north of Los Angeles, when a recent fire destroyed the trees and shrubbery on several hundreds of acres. Murdock MacQuarrie, Agnes Vernon, Marc Fenton and Millard K. Wilson play the leading parts.

Circus life was filmed here last week when the Barnum & Bailey white tops were up for three days. The pictures were made under the direction of Oscar Apfel, with Theodore Roberts as the ringmaster, and will be used in the picture from the play "The Rose and the Ring," to be released by the Jesse Lasky Feature Play Company under the title of "The Ringmaster."

A pair of detectives employed by a suspicious young wife and her parents, to watch the acts of the husband, both disguise as the latter and cause innumerable domestic complications of a comedy character in "Three of a Kind," filmed last week by Harry Edwards at the Universal studio.

One of the coming Powers releases will be "Siss Dobbins," in which Edna Maison is featured, first as a country lass, then at college, and later as an accomplished young woman.

The picture, produced by Lloyd Ingraham, shows scenes in the Los Angeles oil fields, and deals with the success of the country girl in preventing a scheming real estate broker from swindling her father.

Aid for Scenario Writers

With the view of aiding amateurs who desire to become scenario writers, by advising him why their offering is not available, the scenario editor of the Balboa Feature Film Company, of Long Beach, Cal., F. M. Wittermuth, is sending a stereotyped letter with returned manuscripts.

In this the reasons why the story is not good is checked so that the writer may be benefited and at the same time prevent the department from receiving additional scenarios of the same character.

During the present open season for hunting in California, Albert W. Hale, director of the Santa Monica Kalem comedy studio, thought it would be a good time to combine business with pleasure and make a hunting comedy.

Loaded down with guns and ammunition the company, composed of John Brennon, Fred Hornby, Lee Hill, Ethel Teare and a camera man—to say nothing of a pack of dogs—left the studio. During the day they made the picture and bagged some game.

The following morning Director Hale received a bill from the California Hare Farm for twenty-two rabbits, totaling $8.60. Then it dawned on the celluloid actors they had been hunting on a private farm.

Canine Mascot in Play

Props, an ordinary cur, that first broke into the amusement world when he selected the Burbank Theatre, Los Angeles, as his boarding place, when he was a pup, but later abandoned the legitimate stage has attached himself to the Marshall Neilan Kalem studio.

MONTGOMERY FORMS OWN COMPANY

Frank E. Montgomery, who has for years been associated with the production of Indian features first with the Bison company and then the Universal, and more recently the Kalem, has formed his own company and will release through the Sawyer Film Mart.

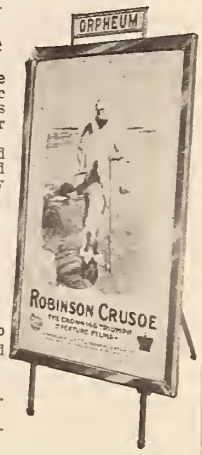
His contract calls for the release of 3,000 feet a week, one reel of comedy and a two-reel Indian feature. The Indian plays will all be two reelers and will feature the Indian actress Mona Darkfeather. The name of the brand will be "The Darkfeather Features," while the comedies will be called "The Monty Comedies."

Frank will direct the Indian Features and is augmenting his band of Indians, and artists of well known ability will support Mona Darkfeather. J. Davis, who has been associated with Mr. Montgomery for a long time, will direct the comedies with Jane Keckley and other capable people in the cast.

The company will occupy the Norbig studios at Edendale until new studios are built.

MARY FULLER IN EMOTIONAL PLAY

Mary Fuller, under the direction of Walter Edwin, is to be seen shortly in a production of a three reel sensational play especially written for her by M. B. Havey, entitled "The Girl of the People."



The role afforded Miss Fuller is particularly adapted to her talents and one which she has had ambitions to play. The story revolves about a girl raised in the slums of a great city struggling in the sweatshops, who finally blooms forth as a kind of modern Joan de Arc.

There are many moments in the play when the action is tense, when the situation draws the heart strings taut, when Miss Fuller rises to supreme heights as an emotional actress.

WHITE INJURED AT REHEARSAL

Glen White, who takes the part of Captain Moray in the Colonial film, "The Seats of the Mighty," escaped serious injury while rehearsing a scene for that play under T. Hayes Hunter at Fort Schuyler recently.

Mr. White slipped on the ramparts of the old fort, and fell a distance of some twenty feet, but fortunately he landed on soft earth and received nothing more serious than a turned ankle and sprained ligaments of the instep. Mr. White appeared behind the scenes on crutches for a few days.

No matter how thrilling a story one may read, interest is not sustained if poor type, poor paper and poor press work make hard work for the eyes. It's the same with motion pictures. A clear picture is as necessary as a good scenario.

Because the basic product is right, the clearest pictures are on "Eastman" film. Look for the stencil mark in the margin.

WONDERFUL WAR POSTERS

IN

ONE, THREE AND SIX SHEETS

THE UNIVERSAL FILM MANUFACTURING CO., IN CONJUNCTION WITH THE MORGAN LITHOGRAPH CO., HAS SPENT A VAST AMOUNT OF MONEY TO PROCURE THE BEST POSSIBLE WAR POSTERS FOR EXHIBITORS. THESE POSTERS ARE MADE IN SIX COLORS AND LOOK LIKE OIL PAINTINGS REPRODUCING WAR SCENES IN EUROPE. THEY ARE THRILLERS FROM THE WORD GO AND CAN NOT FAIL TO ATTRACT THE CROWD TO YOUR HOUSE.

A SPECIAL WAR MAP

This one sheet map made especially for you by the enterprising MORGAN LITHOGRAPH CO., is so arranged that if it is mounted on beaver board the exact location of the warring armies can be shown by means of colored push buttons or flags.

BEFORE EVERY NEWSPAPER OFFICE IN THE WORLD VAST CROWDS ARE COLLECTING. WHAT ARE THEY LOOKING AT? WAR MAPS. PUT ONE OF OUR SPECIAL WAR MAPS IN YOUR LOBBY AND WATCH THE CROWD COLLECT. YOU CAN'T BEAT THIS AS AN ADVERTISING STUNT.

ORDER THEM NOW BEFORE IT IS TOO LATE

If YOU are one of the Exhibitors who showed—

Hobart Bosworth in "The Sea Wolf"

—you will need no urging on our part to book—

"The Pursuit of the Phantom"

In Five Parts

Written and produced by

Hobart Bosworth

Supported by Courtney Foote, the eminent English actor

Did you know that Hobart Bosworth is the author of over a hundred photo plays of great success? It is rather unusual, is it not, that a man who is as popular on the screen as Hobart Bosworth, could also be the author of so many successes?

Besides, Hobart Bosworth is a master not only of photo play technique but of the creation of strong dramatic plays of extraordinary screen value.

An announcement to the patrons of your house that Bosworth will present "The Pursuit of the Phantom" would prove an immense drawing card. It is released October 1st, and it would be a wise move on your part to book it immediately, so as to show it as soon after the release date as possible.

Communicate now with the nearest Paramount Exchange. (Bosworth productions are released exclusively through the Paramount Program.)
